TO PROFESSOR A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON

MY DEAR GURU—That you consented, on one of the many occasions that I have been privileged to be your guest, to accept the dedication of this translation of India's oldest formal romance, has ever been to me a source of keenest joy. It is to you that I owe my knowledge of India and her sister land, Iran; and to you I am indebted, as to a guru indeed—that word which no tongue can truly translate—for so much that makes for true manhood, without which, as without charity, mere knowledge is but ‘as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal.’ I have tried to make my work, here as always, worthy both of you and of Columbia, to which we are each so loyal. Generously you have helped me, even when your leisure was most limited, and gratefully I acknowledge your aid; for of you I can say with all my heart, as the Irish host of legend cried to their hero, Cáilte, Adrae buaid ocus bennachtain; is mor in fis ocus in faillsiugud firinde doberi duind ar cach ní fiarfaigther dit, ‘Success and benison attend thee; great is the lore and the disclosure of truth which thou givest us upon all that is asked of thee! ’

PREFACE

THE precept of Horace, nonum prematur in annum, has been more than obeyed in this volume, for it was on November 3, 1901, that I began the translation of the Vāsavadattā. From that day Subandhu's romance has never been long absent from my thoughts, although many practical exigencies, some of them not wholly agreeable to a scholar, have forced me again and again to lay the task aside, often for six months at a stretch. Yet these clouds, too, have had their silver lining, for not only has my work thus had time to ripen, but much has appeared bearing on the novel during these intervals, or has been called to my attention by friends. The first draft of the translation was, for example, almost completed when, in March, 1903, Dr. George C. O. Haas noted for me an entry in a catalogue of Stechert, of New York, which enabled me to purchase a copy of the edition of the Vāsavadattā printed in Telugu script at Madras in 1862. This necessitated a renewed study of the text in comparison with the edition of Hall, and ultimately led me to include a transliteration of the 'southern' recension in my work, together with the variants of all the other editions. Some of these would have been inaccessible to me, had it not been for the courtesy of the India Office, which, at the instance of Mr. F. W. Thomas, its librarian, most generously loaned me the texts I needed, so that I might use them at leisure in my own study.

Excepting the blank-verse renderings of the few Sanskrit stanzas of the Vāsavadattā, I have sought to make the translation as literal as the English language would permit, and throughout I have spared no pains to facilitate reference to the original text, as well as to explain each allusion that I could elucidate. In the latter regard I have considered others than professed Sanskritists, for I have ventured to hope that some copies of the work may fall into the hands of students of literature, who may here find points of similarity to, or divergence from, the writings to which their special attention may be directed. I dare not flatter myself that I have invariably hit the true meaning of the original, for there are passages which repeated study, through these eleven years, has failed to solve to my own complete satisfaction. But even for this I scarcely grieve, for, like Propertius, I feel,

Laus erit: in magnis et uolusse sat est.*

And if the cruces that have baffled me shall be solved by other minds, none will feel greater joy in their success than I.

It is with a feeling almost akin to regret that I lay down my pen. Perhaps to me the Vāsavadattā has deeper associations than to almost any one else who has laboured on it. In hours of bitterness and sorrow it has helped me to forget; and it has heightened the pleasure of happy days. With all its faults, I love it; possibly I have even been so blind as to reckon its failings virtues; possibly, too, the innate Anglo-Saxon sympathy for the 'under dog' has made me only the more determined in its praise. Is it worth while, or not? As the Arabs say, Allāhu a'lamu, 'God best knows (and man can't tell).'

I am happy to have had, in my work, the assistance of many friends—Mr. Thomas and Dr. Haas, to whom I have already alluded; others to whose courtesies reference will be made in the course of the book—Dr. George A. Grierson, Professor Theodor Zachariae, Mr. Richard Hall; Professor Washburn Hopkins, whose notes aided in introducing me to the mysteries of Grantha script; Professor Charles R. Lanman, who enabled me to use the Harvard copy of Hall's edition until I could procure my own—a courtesy which had already been accorded me for a year previous by the library of the Deutsche Morgenlandische Gesellschaft; Mr. T. K. Balasubrahmanya, who replied in full to my queries concerning the 'southern' text; and Mr. G. Payn Quackenbos, who called my attention to the reference to Subandhu in the Subhāṣitaratnabhāṇḍāgāra, while to Dr. Charles J. Ogden I am indebted for a number of helpful suggestions and corrections, particularly in the Introduction. In a very special way my thanks are due also to Mr. Alexander Smith Cochran, whose interest in the Columbia University Indo-Iranian Series has rendered possible the printing of this particular volume.

My gratitude to my friend and teacher, Professor A. V. Williams Jackson—here editor as well—is more fittingly expressed elsewhere within these covers. Suffice it to say that he read with me word by word the second of the three drafts of this translation, and that wellnigh every page bears some token of his careful scholarship. And to one other—my wife—my deepest obligations are due for whatsoever may be best in my work. She has subjected every line to a most minute and unsparing revision, besides taking upon herself the arduous task of preparing my manuscript for the press. Her interest in the work has never faltered, and to her criticism, at once most kindly and most severe, I owe more than I can tell.

INTRODUCTION

Title. The title of the Vāsavadattā of Subandhu, the oldest romantic novel in India, seems to be derived from that of a long lost drama by Bhāsa,<sup>1</sup> the Svāpnavaśavadattā, or 'Dream-Vāsavadattā' (for compounds of this type cf. Wackernagel, Altindische Grammatik, 2. 1. 244–245, 250–253, Gottingen, 1905). The dream as a novelistic device in India first occurs in Subandhu (see below, p. 28); though in the drama it is found in the first act of the Vuddhaśālabhañjikā and the third of the Karpūramāñjari (both written by Rājaśēkhara, who was acquainted with Bhāsa's work), as well as in the first of Viśvanāthabhaṭṭa's Śringāravātikā (Catalogue of the Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Library of the India Office, 7, 1618, London, 1904). In the fifth act of Bhāsa's Svāpnavaśavadattā the hero, King Vatsarāja, sleeping, dreams of his love Vāsavadattā, who enters, disguised as an attendant of the queen, but who, he thinks, has been burned to death at Lāvānaka (cf. svāpnavaśavadattasya dāhakō, 'the conflagration of the "Dream-Vāsavadattā"' [Rājaśēkhara, cited in the Sūktimuktāvalī (see Peterson and Durgāprasāda, Subhāṣitāvalī of Vallabhadēva, Introd., p. 81, Bombay, 1886)], and Bhāsa's epithet jalaṇamitta, 'friend of fire,' in Gauḍavahā, v. 800), this being employed both in the famous fire-scene in the fourth act of the Ratnāvalī (first half of the seventh century) and in the Tāpasavatsarāja (before the second half of the ninth century; see the analysis by Hultzsch, in Nachrichten von der königlichen Gesellschaft der Wissenschaften zu Gottingen, 1886, pp. 224–241). Not only was the fire-scene thus borrowed from Bhāsa by later dramatists, but from him, it may be conjectured, came, at least in literary form, the entire story of Vāsavadattā and Udayana, or Vatsarāja, as given in the Ratnāvalī, Priya- darśikā, and Tāpasavatsarāja,<sup>1</sup> the ultimate source probably being the lost Bṛhatkathā. With the Vāsavadattā of these latter works Subandhu's heroine has only her name in common, nor is any other story concerning her known to exist in Sanskrit literature (cf. Krishnamachariar, Introd., pp. 48-50; Lacôte, Essai sur Guṇāḍhya et la Bṛhatkathā, pp. 15-16, Paris, 1908). Though sleeping on the stage is forbidden by Sanskrit dramaturgy, the hero of the Svapnavāsavadattā dreams of the heroine, an episode imitated, I would suggest, by Rājaśēkhara in his Viddhaśālabhañjikā and Karpūramāñjarī. In similar fashion Subandhu seems to have derived from this play<sup>2</sup> both the dream-episode and the name of his heroine, who was indeed a 'dream-Vāsavadattā'; and it would then appear that he invented the remainder of the romance. This is also the opinion of Krishnamachariar (Introd., pp. 48, 50), who suggests, however, that Subandhu may have adapted some old wives' tale.

Author. The author of the Vāsavadattā was the only Subandhu to win for himself a name in Sanskrit literature, unless exception be made in favour of Subandhu, son of Gōpāyana or Lōpāyana, who, according to the Sarvānukramanī (ed. Macdonell, p. 19, Oxford, 1886), was one of the four authors of Rig-Veda 5. 24 (cf. the legend concerning him in Bṛhaddēvatā, 7. 84-102, ed. and tr. Macdonell, Cambridge, Mass., 1904). The name, however, occurs with tolerable frequency in Sanskrit (cf. Bohtlingk and Roth, Sanskrit-Wörterbuch, 7. 1086, St. Petersburg, 1875), and it would even seem to be found, under the form Šu-ba-an-di, or Šu-ba-an-du, in one of the Tell-el-Amarna Tablets, dating approximately from the fourteenth or fifteenth century B.C. (Winckler, Thontafeln von Tell-el-Amarna, Nos. 224-229, Berlin, 1896).

<sup>2</sup> In May, 1910, the Svapnavāsavadattā and nine other dramas of Bhāsa were discovered near Padmanābhapurā by Ganapati Śāstrī, who later found another manuscript containing, among other plays, a second copy of the Svapnavāsavadattā. These dramas were edited, after this introduction was already in type, in the Trivandrum Sanskrit Series.

Sanskrit References to Subandhu. References in Sanskrit literature and inscriptions to our Subandhu (whose date is discussed below, pp. 8-11) are but scanty. By far the most important allusion is contained in the eleventh stanza of Bāna's introduction to his Harsacarita (seventh century):

śākyē "va pāṇḍuputrāṇām gatayā karnagōcaram,*

'verily, the pride of <poets> melted away through the <Vāsavadattā> coming to their ears > even as the pride of the <sages> melted away through the Pāṇḍavas' <Indra-given spear coming nigh Karna >.'<sup>1</sup> Bāna is also supposed to allude to the Vāsavadattā when, in the twentieth stanza of his introduction to his Kādambarī, he declares his new work to be iyam atedvayī kathā, 'this story surpassing the two,' these being, according to the commentator, the Vāsavadattā and the Bṛhatkathā. About a century later Vākpati, the author of the Prakrit historical poem Gaudavaha, wrote (v. 800), in describing himself:

*bhāsammi jalāṇamittē kantidēvē a jassa rahuārē
sōbandhavē a bandhammi hāriyandē a ānandō,*

'in Bhāsa—the friend of fire—in the author of the Raghu (vāṇīśa)—that lord of beauty—in Subandhu's work, and in that of Haricandra is his delight.' In Kavirāja's Rāghavapāṇḍaviyā, which dates from about 1200 A. D., occurs the stanza (I. 41):

subandhur bāṇabhaṭṭaś ca kavirāja iti trayah vakrōktimārganīpuṇāś caturthō vidyatē na vā,

'Subandhu, Bāṇabhaṭṭa, and Kavirāja—these three be skilful in the path of ambiguity<sup>2</sup>; a fourth there is not found.' The <sup>1</sup> This verse is interpolated at the end of the Vāsavadattā by the Telugu and Grantha editions, and Krishnamachariar (Introd., pp. 38-39) implies that it may have been written by Subandhu and later have found its way into the Harsacarita. His theory is to me untenable. On the use of the signs <>, etc., see p. 17.

<sup>2</sup> On vakrōkti see Sāhityadarpana, No. 641; Appayyadiksita, Kuvalayānandakārikā, I. 158-159; Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 181-182, Benares, 1898; Bernheimer and Jacobi, in ZDMG. 63. 797-821; 64. 130-139, 586-590, 751-759; 65. 308-312. Subandhu is also mentioned immediately before Bāna in the Sarasvatikanthābhāraṇa according to Muller, India, What can it Teach us?, p. 331, note 5, London, 1883, but I have not been able to find the reference.

twelfth-century Śrikanthacarita of Mankha contains the stanza (2. 53) :

mēṇṭhē svardviradādhirōhiṇi vaśāṇi yātē subandhāu vudhēh śāntē hanta ca bhāravāu vighaṭitē bāṇē visādasprśah vāgdevyā viramantu mantuvidhurā drāg dr̄ṣṭayaś cūṣṭatē śiṣṭah kaścana sa prasādayati tām yadvāṇīśadvāṇīnī, ‘Mēṇṭha having mounted the elephant of the sky [i.e., having died], Subandhu having yielded to the will of destiny, Bhāravi, alas, being at rest, and Bāna being broken, let the reason-reft glances of the sorrow-stricken goddess of speech [Sarasvati] quickly find repose; for any one left that bestirreth himself doth win her, to whose voice she is a goodly dancer.’ Two centuries later, Śāringadhara, quoting Rājaśēkhara (cf. above, p. 1), who flourished about 900 A. D., in his Paddhati (cf. Aufrecht, ‘Ueber die Paddhati von Čāringadhara,’ in ZDMG. 27.77; Śāringadhara-paddhati, ed. Peterson, 1. No. 188, Bombay, 1888), made the citation :

bhāsō rāmīlaśāumīlāu vararuciḥ śrīśāhasānīkāḥ kavir
mēṇṭhō bhāravikālīdāsatalalāḥ skandhāḥ subandhuś ca yāḥ

‘Bhāsa, Rāmīla, Sāumīla, Vararuci, the poet Sāhasānīka, Mēṇṭha, Bhāravi, Kālidāsa, Tarala, Skandha, and Subandhu, Danḍīn, Bāṇa, Divākara, Gaṇapati, and the charming Ratnākara,—what are all they to him by whom the exalted Sarasvatī is possessed?’ Rājaśēkhara also refers to Subandhu in the following stanza quoted by Aufrecht (ZDMG. 36. 366) from the Scđuktikarṇā-mṛta (cf. also Peterson and Durgāprasāda, Subhāshitāvalī of Vallabhadeva, Introd., p. 57, Bombay, 1886; Krishnamachariar, Introd., p. 41) :

subandhāu bhaktir naḥ ka iha raghukārē na ramatē

viśuddhīkīlī śūraḥ prakṛtimadhurā bhāravīgiras

‘in Subandhu is our delight; who rejoiceth not in the author of the Raghu(vāṇīśa)<sup>1</sup>? satisfaction delighteth in the son of Dākṣī<sup>2</sup>; even Haricandia joyeth the heart; of faultless diction is Śūra<sup>3</sup>; the words of Bhāravi are delightsome in theme; Bhavabhūti doth infuse an inward pleasure.’ Krishnamachariar also cites an allusion to the author of the Vāsavadattā in Abhinavabhaṭṭabāṇa’s Vīranārāyaṇacarita (l. c.) :

*pratikavibhīdanabāṇah kavītātarugahanaviharaṇamayūraḥ
sahṛdayalōkasubandhur jayati śrībhaṭṭabāṇakavīrājaḥ,*

‘victorious is the noble Bhaṭṭabāṇa, king of poets, an arrow [or, “a Bāṇa”] for piercing hostile poets; a peacock [or, “a Mayūra”] for wandering through the forest of the trees of poetry; a goodly kinsman [or, “a Subandhu”] for all connoisseurs.’ An anonymous citation in the modern anthology Subhāṣitaratnabhāṇḍāgāra (ed. Parab, 3 ed., p. 56, Bombay, 1891) runs:

māghaś cōrō mayūrō murarīpur aparō bhāravīḥ sāravidyāḥ śrīharṣah kālidāsah kavīr atha bhavabhūtyāhvayō bhōjarājaḥ śrīdāṇḍī dīṇḍimākhyāḥ śrītīmukūtagurūr bhallaṭō bhattabāṇaḥ khyātāś cā ‘nyē subandhīvādaya iha kṛtibhir viśvam āhlādayanti,

‘Māgha, Cōra, Mayūra, Mura’s second foe (Murāri), Bhāravi in climax learned, Harṣa, Kālidāsa, and also the poet named Bhavabhūti, Bhōjarāja, Daṇḍin (hight “the Drum”), Bhallaṭa weighty with the diadem of fame, Bhaṭṭabāṇa, and other renowned ones, such as Subandhu, here on earth rejoice the universe with their compositions.’

In the latter part of the sixteenth century, Ballāla, in his Bhōjaprabandha, which he set forth as a history of Bhōja, who ruled at Dhārā (the modern Dhār) in the eleventh century, mentioned Subandhu, according to some manuscripts, as one of the thirteen principal members of the host of five hundred literati who graced the royal court (cf. Wilson, Works, 5. 174, London, 1865; Hall, Introd., p. 7, note 1); but the list varies so extremely in the different manuscripts of the Bhōjaprabandha that little stress can be laid upon it, especially in view of the legendary character of the work as a whole. Finally, mention should also be made, for the sake of completeness, of an apparent allusion to the Vāsavadattā in Dandin's Daśakumāracarita (ed. Godabole and Parab, p. 110, lines 11-12, Bombay, 1898) : anurūpabhartrgāmininām ca vāsavadattādīnām varṇanēna grāhaya 'nuśayam, 'and make her repent by a description of Vāsavadattā and others who gained suitable husbands.' This clearly refers, however, to the well-known story of Vāsavadattā and Udayana (see above, p. 2); and it is equally impossible that the vāsavadattām adhikrtya krtō granthah mentioned in the Vārttika (probably third century B.C.) on Pāṇini, 4. 3. 87, should be connected in any way with Subandhu's romance.

It should also be noted that Narasimha Vāidya, one of the glossators of the Vāsavadattā, says : kavir ayam vikramādityasabhyah. tasmin rājñi lōkāntarām prāptē etan nibandham kṛtavān, 'this poet [Subandhu] was a retainer of Vikramāditya. When this king attained the other world, he [Subandhu] composed this work' (Hall, Introd., p. 6, note). Hall's manuscript D, moreover, which belongs to what I may tentatively call the 'South Indian recension' of the Vāsavadattā (see below, p. 38), terms Subandhu 'the son of Vararuci's sister' (śrīvararucibhāgīnyā), Vararuci himself being, as is well known, one of the 'nine gems' of Vikramāditya's court, flourishing at least later than the fifth century (Bloch, Vararuci und Hemacandra, p. 13, Gütersloh, 1893; cf. Macdonell, History of Sanskrit Literature, p. 324, London, 1900). Hall denies that Subandhu was Vararuci's nephew (Introd., pp. 6-7), but it is possible that the tradition contains a larger element of truth than is often supposed (cf. Wilson, Works, 5. 177, London, 1865). It is, at all events, echoed by the Bhōjaprabandha,—whatever be the value assigned to such testimony—which associates Subandhu and Vararuci in the passage already referred to.

Inscriptions of India mention Subandhu only once to my knowledge. This single instance is a Canarese record of 1168 A.D., found at Balagāmi (Rice, Mysore Inscriptions, p. 111, Bangalore, 1879), which contains the words: 'In śabda a Pāṇini paṇḍita, in nīti Bhūṣaṇācārya, in nātya and other bharata śāstras Bharatamuni, in kāvya Subandhu, in siddhānta Lakulīśvara, at the feet of Śiva a Skanda adorning the world, thus is Vāma Śaktiyati truly described.' The only additional information thus gained is that by the twelfth century his fame had spread to southern India.

Subandhu's Allusions to Sanskrit Literature. If Subandhu is thus recognised but sparingly and indefinitely in the literature and epigraphy of his native land, he is himself most generous in alluding to the productions of other authors. The majority of his references, however, cast little light upon his date, for no real conclusions can be drawn from his mention of the Brhatkathā (ed. Hall, pp. 110, 147), the Kāmasūtra (ed. Hall, p. 89), the Chandōviciti section of the Bhāratīyanātyaśāstra (ed. Hall, pp. 94, note, 119, 235), the Mahābhārata and Harivanaśa (ed. Hall, pp. 21, 27, 93, 234, 254; on Subandhu's indebtedness to the Mahābhārata see Cartellieri, 'Das Mahābhārata bei Subandhu und Bāṇa,' in WZKM. 13. 57-74), the Rāmāyaṇa (ed. Hall, p. 234), the Upaniṣads (ed. Hall, p. 235), and the Mīmāṃsā and Nyāya philosophies (ed. Hall, pp. 93, 235, 297), any more than we can derive any definite conclusions from his general and hostile mention of the Buddhists (ed. Hall, pp. 144, 179, 235, 255, 297 bis) and Jains (ed. Hall, pp. 93, 187, 297; cf. on these allusions to the Buddhists and the Jains Telang, 'Subandhu and Kumārila,' in JRASBo. 18. 150-159).<sup>1</sup>

It has been held, on the basis of Śivarāma's commentary, that the words bāuddhasaṅgatim ivā lanikārabhūsitām, 'decked with <adornments> as an assembly of Buddhists is decked with the <Alamkāra>' (ed. Hall, p. 235), refer to the Bāuddhasaṅgatyalankāra of Dharmakīrti (cf., in general, on Dharmakīrti, Pathak, 'Dharmakīrti and Śaṅkarāchārya,' in JRASBo. 18. 88-96, and the criticism of Telang, ib. 18. 148–150). Since, however, Dharmakīrti is described by I-Tsing, who travelled in India in 671–695 A.D., as among those ‘of late years’ (Record of the Buddhist Religion, tr. Takakusu, p. 181, cf. p. lviii, Oxford, 1896); and since Tāranātha (Geschichte des Buddhismus in Indien, tr. Schiefner, pp. 184–185, St. Petersburg, 1869) makes him a contemporary of the Tibetan king, Srong-btsan-sgam-po, who died about 650 A.D. (Duff, Chronology of India, p. 53, Westminster, 1899), Lévi (‘La Date de Candragomin,’ in Bulletin de l’École d’Extrême-Orient, 1903, p. 18; cf. Kern, Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 130, note 11, Strassburg, 1896) is doubtless right in denying that Subandhu makes any allusion to Dharmakīrti’s activity (for an opposing view see Krishnamachariar, Introd., p. 32).

This leaves but a single literary allusion in the Vāsavadattā which can in any way be construed as casting light on the date of the romance. The reference in question is nyāyasthitim ivō 'ddyōtakarasvariūpām, ‘revealing her beauty’ as the permanence of the Nyāya system has its ‘form from Uddyōtakara’ (ed. Hall, p. 235). Since we know that Uddyōtakara wrote his Nyāyavārttika to refute the heterodox (i.e., Buddhist) views of Dignāga, who flourished between 520 and 600 A.D. (Kern, op. cit. p. 129; Müller, Six Systems of Indian Philosophy, p. 477, London, 1899), it is obvious that Uddyōtakara, to whom Subandhu so unmistakably refers, can not have lived before the latter part of the sixth century. It is, therefore, certain that the Vāsavadattā can not be prior to the late sixth century of our era.

The Date of Subandhu. There is but one allusion in Subandhu’s romance itself which can be interpreted as referring to a historical event. This is the tenth introductory stanza :

‘moisture’ is destroyed, ‘cranes sport not’, ‘the heron fares not forth’; yea, ‘eloquence’ is destroyed, ‘new-comers make disport», «who devours not whom»?—for Vikramāditya, like a lake, hath passed away on earth.' This has been taken, particularly by Hall (Introd., p. 6), to imply that Subandhu 'lived long posterior to the great Vikramāditya of Ujjayinī.' Although some deny that this monarch, about whom cluster so many legends, ever existed (see, for example, Macdonell, History of Sanskrit Literature, pp. 323–324, London, 1900), such a view can scarcely be supported, and there is good reason to believe him to be identical with Candragupta II, who reigned from about 374 to 413 (Smith, Early History of India from 600 B.C. to the Muhammadan Conquest, 2 ed., pp. 275–283, Oxford, 1908). It would be most tempting, so far as the special problems of the Vāsavadattā are concerned, could one accept the view, argued with great learning by Hoernle ('Some Problems of Ancient Indian History,' in FRAS. 1903, pp. 545–570, and 'The Identity of Yaśodhaīman and Vikramāditya, and some Collaries,' ib. 1909, pp. 89–144; against this Fleet, 'Dr. Hoernle's Article on Some Problems of Ancient Indian History,' ib. 1904, pp. 164–166, and Smith, 'The Indian Kings named Śilāditya, and the Kingdom of Mo-la-p'o,' in ZDMG. 58. 787–796), that Yaśodharman (on whom see also Smith, op. cit. pp. 301–302), whom he identifies with the great Vikramāditya, 'founded his Mālava empire about 533 A.D., and reigned up to about 583 A.D.' Hoernle accordingly dates Subandhu in the second half of the sixth century, and holds that the Vāsavadattā was written before 606–612, the latter year being that of Harṣa's coronation. Attractive as is this hypothesis, I am compelled to admit that it can scarcely be used to determine the date of Subandhu, the whole evidence of Indian history being against it.

The period following the death of Vikramāditya is described in the stanza quoted above as one of degeneration, and there may be a covert allusion to the same (or a similar) evil state of affairs in the phrase navanṛpaticittavṛttibhir iva kulyāpamānakārinibhir, 'as the disposition of new monarchs causes dishonour to the honourable' (ed. Hall, p. 220). Hoernle, holding that Vikramāditya's successor was his son Śilāditya, who was dethroned by his enemies (probably about 593 A.D.), being 'replaced in the kingdom of his father' (probably before 604 A.D.) only by the aid of the Hun, Pravarasēna II of Kashmir (Rājatarāṅgiṇī 3. 330), has evolved a most ingenious theory which I was long inclined to adopt. Śilāditya is, on this hypothesis, described as not only unfortunate, but cruel, as evidenced by his execution of the Māukharī Grahavarman, king of Kanauj, and the brutal fettering and imprisonment of the dead monarch's young wife, Rājyaśrī (Harṣacarita, tr. Cowell and Thomas, p. 173, London, 1897); and as unpatriotic, this being shown by his acceptance of assistance from non-Aryan Huns. Despite his restoration by Pravarasēna, the reign of Śilāditya, who, Hoernle maintains, succeeded his father, Vikramāditya, about 583 A.D., came to a disastrous end in 606 (or 605), when he was utterly defeated by Rājyavardhana II, the brother of the famous Harṣavardhana who is the hero of the Harṣacarita. Harṣavardhana himself succeeded to the throne of Thāṇesar in 606, when Rājyavardhana was treacherously slain by the Gāuḍa king, Śāśāṅka, and reigned until 648 (on Harṣavardhana, in general, cf. Ettinghausen, Harṣa Vardhana, empereur et poète de l'Inde septentrionale, Paris, 1906).

While holding this theory, I gave to it the pleasing embellishment of an hypothesis, without real basis, that the dynasties to which Vikramāditya and Harṣavardhana belonged were rivals, and that Bāṇa was the faithful eulogist of Harṣavardhana exactly as Subandhu was loyal to Vikramāditya. Since, moreover, Bāṇa's monarch had been victorious over the degenerate son of Subandhu's royal patron, I deemed that Bāṇa had deliberately set out to surpass Subandhu, so that Harṣavardhana's court might excel Vikramāditya's in literature as well as in arms. Thus, there would have been a deeper motive for Bāṇa to write the Harṣacarita than the mere incentive of literary emulation which is generally ascribed to him.

History does not sustain this elaborate figment, which I have recorded mainly to keep others from possible pursuit of a false clue. Not only was Vikramāditya not identical with Yaśodharman, as already noted, but Śilāditya was the very reverse of a cruel-monarch (Smith, Early History of India from 600 B.C. to the Muhammadan Conquest, 2 ed., p. 306, Oxford, 1908). If one were to stress the theory of rivalry both in letters and in war, one might suppose that Subandhu was a courtier either of Śaśāṅka of Gāuḍa or of Dēvagupta of Eastern Mālava (cf. Ettinghausen, op. cit. pp. 36–38, 148), both of whom were ignoble in character. But of this there is not the slightest evidence; and even if the name of the father of either of them was Vikramāditya (a most improbable hypothesis), that would give little point to Subandhu's stanza, which plainly alludes to the famous Vikramāditya, and is, therefore, only a conventional harking back to happy times long past. In determining the date of the Vāsavadattā I am forced to consider the lines under discussion as utterly valueless.

While the sole known basis for assigning a terminus a quo to the composition of Subandhu's romance is, as we have seen, the allusion to Uddyōtakara, who probably flourished in the latter half of the sixth century, the terminus ad quem is almost certainly the date of Bāṇa's Harṣacarita. This romance, which was left unfinished by its author, ends abruptly with the rescue of Rājyaśrī, the sister of Harṣavardhana and widow of Grahanavarman (i. e. 607, or 606), though Harṣa had reigned several years when Bāṇa wrote (Harṣacarita, tr. Cowell and Thomas, pp. 75–76, London, 1897). The precise date of composition of Bāṇa's second romance, the Kādambarī, is unknown; but, as Bāṇa died before completing it (Kādambarī, tr. Riddings, p. 182, London, 1896), it must have been written considerably after the Harṣacarita. It may also be regarded as certain that Subandhu lived later, probably by at least a century (cf. p. 12), than Daṇḍin, the author of the picaresque Daśakumāracarita (Weber, Indische Streifen, I. 311–315, 353, 372, Berlin, 1868; Daśakumāracarita, tr. Meyer, pp. 120–127, Leipzig, 1902; Collins, The Geographical Data of the Raghuvanśa and Daśakumāracarita, p. 46, Leipzig, 1907, places Daṇḍin's literary activity before 585 A.D.).

The Place of Composition of the Vāsavadattā. The question next arises as to the place of composition of the Vāsavadattā.

Here the answer must be still more vague.<sup>1</sup> It is obviously impossible that the romance was written at the court of Bhōja, as some manuscripts of the Bhōjaprabandha would imply, for that ruler did not reign at Dhārā until the eleventh century; nor does there seem to have been any Bhōja reigning in the latter part of the sixth century at whose court Subandhu might have been, thus being confusedly located by Ballāla in the train of the famous Bhōja of Dhārā. One might, indeed, by reckless theorising, allege that Subandhu, thus being placed at Dhārā in Mālava, had actually been a courtier either of Dēvagupta of Eastern Mālava or of Śilāditya of Mo-la-p'o (Western Mālava); but the real reason for this wild statement by the author of the Bhōjaprabandha (or, more probably, by one of his interpolators) was obviously the identification, occasionally made by Sanskrit authors (cf. Weber, Akademische Vorlesungen über indische Literaturgeschichte, 2 ed., pp. 218-219, Berlin, 1876; Rajendralala Mitra, 'Bhoja Rājā of Dhár and his Homonyms,' in JASBe. 32, 93), of Bhōja and Vikramāditya, an equation too absurd to require refutation.

To sum up the discussion, we can say with reasonable certainty only that the Vāsavadattā was written by Subandhu at a place unknown, probably between 550 and somewhat after 606 A. D., the terminus a quo being the circumstance that Uddyōtakara cannot have flourished until at least the middle of the sixth century, and the terminus ad quem by the date of composition of the Harṣacarita, early in the seventh century.<sup>2</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Krishnamachariar devotes a long section of his Introduction (pp. 30-48) to a discussion of Subandhu's date, which he places after Bāna and before Vāmana, the author of the Kātyālāñkeravṛtti, whom tradition makes a minister of Jayapīda of Kashmir (779-813; cf. Duff, Chronology of India, pp. 68, 70-71, Westminster, 1899). He rightly argues that the various references in Sanskrit authors to Subandhu and Bāna allow of no conclusion as to the priority of the Vāsavadattā; but some of his hypotheses, as that Subandhu's dislike of Buddhism proves him to be later than Bāna (p. 45), as well as his general implication that the difference between the two writers is due to degeneration of style (cf. pp. 14-18), are, in my judgment, certainly untenable; nor does he touch with sufficient depth upon what evidence may be drawn from Indian history.

Data Concerning Subandhu's Life. Our knowledge of Subandhu is most meagre. In the thirteenth stanza of his introduction to the Vāsavadattā he terms himself sujanāikabandhu, which Hall (Introd., p. 24), following the commentator, Śivarāma, renders 'an intimate of none but the virtuous,' although the word should rather be translated 'Sujana's only brother.'<sup>1</sup> The tradition that Subandhu was the nephew of the Prakrit grammarian, Vararuci, has already been mentioned (see above, p. 6), though with disapproval; and there seems also to have been a legend that he was, by birth, a Kashmirian Brāhman (Weber, Indische Streifen, I. 371, Berlin, 1868, quoting Cunningham, in JASBc. 17. 98-99).<sup>2</sup> Subandhu is not known to have written anything besides the Vāsavadattā. Citations are made from him in the Śāringadharapaddhati, Subhāsitāvalī, Padyāvalī, and Sūktikarṇāmrta (Aufrecht, Catalogus Catalogorum, I. 726, Leipzig, 1891); but the quotations in the first two anthologies, which alone are thus far edited [by Peterson (Bombay, 1888) and by Peterson and Durgāprasāda (Bombay, 1886), respectively], are drawn exclusively from the Vāsavadattā. Hall (Introd., p. 48, note), it is true, found in the still unedited Padyavēṇī of Vēṇidatta, compiled about the reign of Shāh Jahān (early 17th century), the following distich then supposed to have been written by Subandhu.

brāhmī "va dāurjanī saṃśad vandaniyā samēkhalā,*

'an assembly of scoundrels, knowing <how to live by disparaging speeches>, accepting <evil teachings>, and <wicked to the just>, should be honoured even as an assembly of Brāhmans knowing

<sup>2</sup> It is interesting to note, in this connexion, that Krishnamachariar holds that Subandhu was a Vāiśnavite and an adherent of the Mīmāṃsā philosophy (Introd., pp. 23, 28).

·*<the end of their rosaries>, accepting «seats of kuśa-grass», and «girt with their girdles».*’ The distich was not, however, written by Subandhu, but by Trivikrama Bhaṭṭa, the author of the Damayantikathā, or Nalacampū (i. 7; cf. Bohtlingk, Indische Sprüche, 2 ed., No. 52, St. Petersburg, 1870–1873), who flourished about 915 A.D. (Duff, Chronology of India, p. 85, Westminster, 1899).<sup>1</sup>

The Vāsavadattā a Kathā. The Vāsavadattā is expressly stated by many manuscripts (cf. Hall’s ed., p. 300, note 7, and Śivarāma ad loc.) to be an ākhyāyikā, or ‘tale,’ this being very possibly influenced by the reference to some work entitled, from the name of its heroine, vāsavadattākhyāyikā in the Vārttika on Pāṇini 4. 3. 87 (cf. also the Vārttika on 4. 2. 60, and see Krishnamachariar, Introd., pp. 36–37). The ākhyāyikā, according to Sanskrit rhetoricians (cf. Regnaud, Rhétorique sanskrite, pp. 76–77, Paris, 1884), is a division of gadya, or poetical prose; and the classical example is the Harṣacarita of Bāṇa, who himself seems to intimate that the Vāsavadattā likewise belongs to this category by using the term ākhyāyikākārā, ‘authors of ākhyāyikās,’ immediately before his allusion to Subandhu’s romance, in the tenth stanza of his introduction to the Harṣacarita. The classic description of the ākhyāyikā is given in the following passage of the Sāhityadarpana (ed. Roer, No. 568, Calcutta, 1851):

ākhyāyikā kathāvat syāt kavēr vamśādikirtanam
asyām anyakavīnām ca vṛttam gadyam kvacit kvacit kathānśānām vyavacchēda āśvāsa iti badhyatē āryāvaktrāpavaktrānām chandasā yēna kēnacit anyāpadēśēnā “śvāsamukhē bhāvyarthasūcanam,

‘the ākhyāyikā should be as the kathā. (There should be) in it an account of the lineage of the poet and of other poets; poetry in some places (and) prose in others (should be employed); divisions, called “sighs,” are used for the divisions of the story; at the beginning of the “sighs” (there should be) an intimation of the theme, under the guise of something else, by any metre whatsoever of the āryā, vaktra, or apavaktra (classes).’

<sup>1</sup> Krishnamachariar (Introd., pp. 39–40) calls attention to a number of passages in the Nalacampū (ed. Bombay, 1885; new ed., 1903) in which he holds that Trivikrama Bhatta imitated Subandhu. He likewise notes parallels between the Vāsavadattā and the Jivandharacampū of Haricandra (p. 52), who wrote after 897 A.D. (p. 44), Śiśupālavadha (p. 53), Rāmāyana (p. 64), Mēghadūta (p. 54), Vikramōrvaśi (pp. 62, 64), and Mālatīmādhava (pp. 61–62), as well as the Harṣacarita (pp. 53–57), and Kādambarī (pp. 52, 53, 55, 57, 63).

The kathā, or ‘story,’ best represented by Bāṇa’s Kādambarī, is described by the Sāhityadarpana (No. 567) as follows :

kathāyām sarasam vastu padyāir ēva vinirmitam kvacid atra bhavād āryā kvacid vaktrāpavaktrakē ādāu padyāir namaskārah khalādēr vṛttakīrtanam,

‘in the kathā a theme with poetic sentiments is represented even with poetry; in it there should be the āryā metre in some places, (and) the vaktra and apavaktra metres in other places; at the beginning (there should be) homage in verse (to a divinity, also) a description of the character of knaves and the like.’ The older, and in my judgment the better, definition of this type of Sanskrit literature, however, is given by Daṇḍin, the author of the picaresque Daśakumāracarita, who says (Kāvyādarśa I. 23-25, 28) :

*apādah padasantānō gadyam ākhyāyikā kathā iti tasya prabhēdāu dvān tayōr ākhyāyikā kila nāyakēnāi “va vācyā” nāyā nāyakēnē ‘tarēṇa vā svagunāvīkriyā dōṣo nā ‘tra bhūtarthaśāṁśināḥ api tv aniyamō drṣṭas tatrā ‘py anyāir udīraṇāt anyō vaktrā svayam vō “ti kīdrg vā bhēdalakṣāṇam
.....
tat kathākhyāyikē “ty īkā jātiḥ sañjñādvayāñkītā atrāi “vā ‘ntarbhāvīṣyanti śīśāś cā “khyānajātayāḥ,*

‘prose is a series of words without strophes; its two classes are the ākhyāyikā (and) the kathā. Now, the ākhyāyikā should be spoken by the hero, the other (the kathā) by the hero or another. A revelation of one’s own personality, if he narrates facts, is no fault here. Nevertheless, the lack of fixed distinction is seen from the story being told by others even there (in the ākhyāyikā). Whether another (is) the speaker, or one’s self, is a sorry standard of discrimination..... Therefore the kathā (and) ākhyāyikā are one category marked with a double name ; and here, too, will be comprised the other categories of stories.'<sup>1</sup>

In support of this statement of Daṇḍin, it may be noted that the Vāsavadattā, though termed, as we have seen, an ākhyāyikā lacks the necessary divisions into 'sighs' ; in its opening stanzas it (like a kathā) describes 'the character of knaves and the like' (introductory stanzas 6-9) ; and it contains a long episode spoken by another than the hero—the conversation of the maina with his mate concerning the heroine of the story. The manifest resemblance of the Vāsavadattā to the Kādambarī, which is considered to be a kathā, together with its unlikeness to the Harsacarita, whose technique it should share, were it really an ākhyāyikā, also serves to confirm the views of Daṇḍin rather than those of the Sāhityadarpana. One need have little hesitation, therefore, in regarding the Vāsavadattā as technically a kathā.<sup>2</sup>

The 'Style' and Rhetorical Embellishments of the Vāsavadattā. The rīti, or 'style,' of the Vāsavadattā is the Gāudī, which the Sāhityadarpana (No. 627) defines as follows (cf., in general, Regnaud, Rhétorique sanskrite, pp. 253-255, Paris, 1884):

*ōjahprakāśakāir varṇāir bandha āḍambarah punah
samāsabahulā gāudī,*

'the Gāudī, moreover, is a resonant arrangement (of words) with sounds expressing strength, (and) abounds in compounds.' Vāmana, in his Kāvyārtha (1. 2. 12), describes this 'style' as 'consisting of strength (ōjas) and grace (kānti),' while avoiding 'sweetness' (mādhurya) and 'softness' (sāukumārya). According to the Kāvyādarśa (1. 44a, 46a, 54a, 92a), moreover, the Gāudī especially affects alliteration, etymologising, and hyperbole.<sup>3</sup> When it is added that, as the Kāvyādarśa (1. 14-29) also <sup>1</sup> It may be mentioned in passing that Ānandavardhana's Dhvanyālōka, 3. 8 (tr. Jacobi, in ZDMG. 56. 789), states that compound words are longer in the ākhyāyikā than in the kathā.

<sup>2</sup> I am glad to note that my conclusion in this respect is confirmed by Krishnamachariar (Introd., pp. 8-9).

states, an ākhyāyikā, kathā, or other form of narrative should, like poetry in general, include descriptions of battles, cities, oceans, mountains, seasons, sunrise, moonrise, and the like (each and all of which may be exemplified from the Vāsavadattā), we see at once how closely Subandhu was restricted in the composition of his romance, and how faithfully and minutely he discharged his self-imposed task.

The slender thread of narrative in the Vāsavadattā is embellished with many forms of literary adornment, which, indeed, constitute by far the major portion of the work. First and foremost among these embellishments stands the ślēṣa, or 'paronomasia,' and with good reason Subandhu declares himself to be 'a repository of cunning skill in arranging a series of paronomasias in every syllable' (pratyaksaraślēṣamayaprabandhavinyāsavāidagdhyanidhir, introductory stanza 13). The ślēṣa is well defined by Dāṇḍin, in his Kāvyādarśa (2. 363; cf. Regnaud, Rhétorique sanskrite, pp. 227-229, Paris, 1884; Sāhityadarpana, No. 705; Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 188-197, 217-218, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānundakārikā, I. 62), as follows:

bhinnam̄ dvidhā svabhāvōktir vakrōktiś cē 'ti vāñmayam̄*

'the paronomasia generally enhances the beauty in all equivocations; the phraseology (is) divided in two parts: the natural meaning and the equivocal meaning.' Examples of the ślēṣa, usually intimated in the Vāsavadattā by iva, 'as' (and indicated in this translation by <> or, when double and triple, by <<>, <<<>>), abound in Subandhu's romance. As a single specimen may be cited vānarasēnām iva sugrīvāṅgadōpaśobhitām, 'adorned with a of utkalkāprāya, or style of long compounds and words containing alliteration (Regnaud, Rhétorique sanskrite, p. 75, Paris, 1884), and of the vr̄tiśi ḫrabhāti, or 'violent manner' of scenes of awe and conflict (Lévi, Théâtre indien, I. 92-93, Paris, 1890). The 'manner' is also sometimes madhyamakāśikī (according to Vidyānātha, the author of the Pratāparudrayaśobhūṣana [cf. Regnaud, op. cit., pp. 377-378], quoted by Krishnamachariar, mṛdvarthē 'py anaśprāudhabandhā madhyamakāśikī, 'not conjoined with excessive dignity in a gentle theme'), and the style is mostly nārikēlāpāka (according to Vidyānātha, sa nārikērāpākāḥ syād antarguḍharasūdheyāḥ, 'the rising of hidden flavour'), although sometimes āmrapāka (for which no definition is given).

⟨beautiful throat (sugrīva) and with armlets (aṅgada)⟩ as the army of monkeys was adorned by ‘Sugrīva and Angada’ (ed. Hall, pp. 63–64).<sup>1</sup>

The figure next in frequency to the ślēṣa in the Vāsavadattā is the virōdha, or ‘antithesis,’ where the superficial meaning is self-contradictory, while the paronomasiac reading renders the phrase consistent, and even intensifies it. This rhetorical embellishment is defined as follows in the Kāvyadarśa (2. 333; cf. Sāhityadarpaṇa, No. 718; Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 233–235, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 1. 74):

*viruddhānām padārthānām yatra samsargadarśanam
viśeṣadarśanāyām “va sa virōdhaḥ smṛtō yathā,*

‘when there is an apparent union of antithetical objects simply to show the distinction (between them), it is called virōdha.’ The conventional sign of the virōdha in the Vāsavadattā is api, as iva is indicative of the ślēṣa. As an example of the countless instances of the virōdha in Subandhu’s romance, mention may be made of agrahēṇā ‘pi kāvyajīvajñēna, ‘which ⟨has no planets (a-graha) yet knows ⟨Venus (kāvya=Sukra=the planet Venus) and Jupiter (jīva=Bṛhaspati=the planet Jupiter)⟩, for it is ⟨free from theft (a-graha) and knows ⟨the essence (jīva) of poetry (kāvya)⟩’ (ed. Hall, pp. 113–114).

Besides these two rhetorical devices, Śivarāma, in his commentary on the Vāsavadattā, enumerates a long series of alampāras, or ‘adornments,’ which will now briefly be considered.

The parisaṅkhyā, or ‘special mention,’ usually combined with the ślēṣa in the Vāsavadattā, is an affirmative statement with the implied negation of the paronomasiac meaning of the phrase, and is thus defined by the Sāhityadarpaṇa (No. 735; cf. Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 245–246, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 1. 112):

<sup>1</sup> On Subandhu’s fondness for paronomasia see, further, Krishnamachariar, Introd., pp. 18–20, who also calls attention to repetitions of paronomasia on the same word (p. 27) as well as to the frequent repetition of the same phrase in the romance (pp. 25–26).

praśnād apraśnatō vā "pi kathitād vastunō bhavēt tādṛganyavyapōhaś ccc chābda ārthō 'thavā tada parisaṅkhyā,

'if there is either an expressed or implied exclusion, whether with or without an interrogation, of a thing similar to (but) other than the object mentioned, then it is a parisaṅkhyā.' An example from the Vāsavadattā is nētrōtpātanam munīnām, '«roots (nētra)» were plucked out only in the case of «wormwood-trees(munīnām)» (for «ascetics (munīnām)» did not pluck out their «eyes (nētra)»)' (ed. Hall, p. 19).

The mālādīpaka, or 'garland elucidator' ('verkettete Klimax,' according to Bohtlingk, Sanskrit-Wörterbuch in kurzerer Fassung, s. v., St. Petersburg, 1879-1889), is a rhetorical repetition of words in a sequence so as to heighten the effect, and is thus defined by the Kāvyādarśa (2. 108; cf. Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, p. 226, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 1. 105):

vākyamālā prayuktē "ti tan mālādīpakam matam,*

'a conjoined series of words, each of which refers to the one preceding, is considered a mālādīpaka.' As an example may be cited bhujadāñdēna kōdāñdām kōdāñdēna śarāḥ śarāir arisirās, 'by his staff-like arm the bow, by the bow the arrows, by the arrows his foeman's head' (ed. Hall, p. 41).

The utprēkṣā, or 'poetic fancy,' usually indicated, like the ślēṣā, by iva, 'as,' in the Vāsavadattā, and one of Subandhu's favourite rhetorical devices, is thus concisely defined by the Sāhityadarpana (No. 686; cf. Kāvyādarśa, 2. 221; Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, p. 211, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 1. 30):

bhavēt sambhāvanō "tprēkṣā prakrtasya parātmanā,

'poetic fancy would be the imagining of an object under the character of something else.' Examples of this figure abound in the Vāsavadattā, as in the following description of the moon: dadhidhavalē kālakṣapānakagrāśapinḍa iva niśayamunāphēna-puṇja iva mēnakānakhamārjanāśilāśakala iva, 'while he was white, as it were, with the curds which constitute a morsel of food for (Buddhist) ascetics at their mealtime, and was like a mass of Yamunā's foam by night, and resembled a fragment of stone for the polishing of Mēnakā's nails' (ed. Hall, p. 44).<sup>1</sup>

The yamaka, 'repetition' or 'chiming,' is the repeating of words or parts of words of similar sound but divergent meaning, which the Kāvyadarśa (I. 61; cf. 3. 1-37; Sāhityadarpana, No. 640; Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 185-188, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 4. 6) describes as

āvṛttim varṇasaṅghātagocarāṇi yamakāṇi viduh,

'a repetition consisting of a combination of sounds they know as yamaka.' This is illustrated by the following passage from the Vāsavadattā: āndolitakusumakōsarē kēśarēṇumusi ranitamadhu-ramanīnāṁ ramanīnāṁ vikacakumudākarē mudākarē, '(when there blew a wind that) rocked the filaments of the flowers and removed their pollen from the hair of damsels wearing delight-somely tinkling jewels, whilst it had an abundance of expanded white lotuses, and caused pleasure' (ed. Hall, pp. 52-53).

The prāudhōkti, or 'pomposity,' is thus defined by the Kuvalayānandakārikā (I. 124):

'in the absence of a cause for a thing, the invention of a cause for it is called prāudhōkti.' It is exemplified in the Vāsavadattā by the passage describing the heroine's lip as mukhacandra-sannihitasandhyārāgēṇa dantamāṇirakṣāsindūramudrānukāriṇā, 'which had the glow of eventide in close proximity to her moon-like face; which had what seemed to be a minium seal as a guard for the jewels of her teeth' (ed. Hall, p. 58).

The rūpakātiśayōkti, or 'hyperbolical metaphor,' is merely an exaggerated form of the preceding alamkāra. It is thus defined in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (I. 34):

'identification so that (the object identified) should be swallowed up (and thus completely disappear) would be rūpakātiśayōkti', and as an example may be cited, from the description of Vāsavadattā just quoted, the passage vilōcanēndivarabhramarapāṇik-tibhyāṁ mukhamadanamandiratōraṇābhyāṁ rāgasāgaravelābh-yāṁ yāuvananartakalāsikābhyāṁ bhrūlatābhyāṁ virājamānāṁ, 'adorned with delicate brows which were clusters of bees about her blue-lotus eyes ; portals of her face that formed the abode of Love ; the shores of Passion's sea ; wantoning in youthful dancing' (ed. Hall, p. 61).

The akramātiśayōkti, or 'fused hyperbole,' is closely akin to the preceding rhetorical figure, of which it is merely an intensification. It receives the following definition in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 39) :

'akramātiśayōkti would be in the unity of cause and effect.' Śivarāma cites but one instance of the figure in the Vāsavadattā, this being samaṇi dvīsāṁ dhanuṣāṁ ca jīvākṛṣṭīṁ yōdhāś cakruḥ, 'the warriors drew at once the <lives (jīva)> of their foes and the <strings (jīvā)> of their bows' (ed. Hall, p. 295).

Two other forms of hyperbole are mentioned by Śivarāma as occurring in Subandhu's romance. The first of these is bhēdakātiśayōkti, or 'hyperbole of differentiation.' It is defined as follows in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 36) :

bhēdakātiśayōktis tu tasyāi "vā 'nyatvavarnanam,

'bhēdakātiśayōkti is the description of that (which is the subject under discussion) by means of differentiation,' and it is exemplified in the Vāsavadattā by prthiur api gōtrasamutsāraṇavistāri-tabhūmaṇḍalah, 'Pr̥thu <levelled the earth by banishing the mountains> (but Cintāmaṇi <covered the earth by sending forth his offspring>)' (ed. Hall, p. 22).

The remaining form of hyperbole in the Vāsavadattā is sambandhātiśayōkti, or 'hyperbole of connexion,' which is thus defined in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 37) :

sambandhātiśayōktih syād ayōgē yōgakalpanam,

'sambandhātiśayōkti would be the invention of connexion when connexion is absent,' as when Subandhu describes trees as being anūrukarakasābhīghātāparavaśaravirathaturagagrāsaviśamitapallavāśi, 'with shoots made uneven by the feeding of the horses of the chariot of the sun which are obedient when lashed by the whip in the hands of Anūru' (ed. Hall, p. 120).

The ratnāvalī, or 'jewel necklace,' is defined as follows in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 139):

kramikāprakrtārthānām nyāsan ratnāvalīm viduh,

'an arrangement of objects serially irrelevant they know as ratnāvalī,' and is exemplified in the Vāsavadattā where the heroine is described as vikacēna nētrakamalēna śanāiścarēṇa pādēna tamasā kēśapāśēna grahamayīm iva, 'she seemed to be made of planets: of <Venus>, for she had <wide-open> lotus eyes; of <Saturn>, for she had <slow-moving> steps; of <Rāhu>, for she had <dark> heavy hair' (ed. Hall, p. 64).

The kāvyalinga, or 'poetic reason,' is thus defined by the Sāhityadarpana (No. 710; cf. Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 238-239, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 1. 120):

hētōr vākyapadārthatvē kāvyalingam nigadyatē,

'kāvyalinga is applied to the implication of a cause in a sentence or word,' and finds exemplification in the Vāsavadattā in the passage khalāḥ punas tad anisṭam anucitam ēvā vadhbhārayanty anisṭod-bhāvanarasotaram hi khalaḥrdayam, 'the wicked, on the other hand, make it (thy conduct) out to be undesirable and indecorous; for the heart of the wicked man finds its highest delight centred in bringing to light what is undesirable' (ed. Hall, p. 70).

The mīlita, or 'vanished,' denotes a complete loss of distinction between two objects because of their superficial resemblance, as is expressed by the definition of the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 145; cf. Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 253-254, Benares, 1898; Ruyyaka's Alamkārasarvasva, ed. Durgāprasāda and Parab, p. 167, Bombay, 1893):

mīlitam yadi sādṛśyād bhēda ēva na lakṣyatē,

'if, because of similarity, a distinction is not observed, it is mīlita.' As an example from Subandhu I may cite mādhurya- śātyaśucitvasantāpaśāntibhiḥ payaḥ paya ivē 'ti, 'fancying that "water is as milk because of its sweetness, coolness, purity, and healing of distress" ' (ed. Hall, p. 80).

The anuprāsa, or 'alliteration,' a rhetorical figure found with considerable frequency in Subandhu's romance, is thus defined by the Sāhityadarpaṇa (No. 633; cf. Kāvyādarśa, 1. 55, Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 182-184, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 4. 2-5) :

anuprāsaḥ śabdāsāmyaṇ vāiśamyē 'pi svarasya yat,

'anuprāsa (is) a similarity of sound, despite a dissimilarity of the vowel.' As an example from the Vāsavadattā may be cited these two adjectives descriptive of the River Rēvā: madakalakalaham-sasārasarasitōdbhrāntabhbhākūṭavikaṭapuccchacchatāvyaḍhūtavikaca-kamalakhaṇḍavigalitamakarandabindusandōhasurabhitasalilayā.. . . upakūlasañjātānalanikūṇjapūṇjitatkulāyakukkuṭaghaṭāghūtkā-rabhāiravatīrayā, 'whose waters were perfumed by the abundance of the drops of liquid which had fallen from the fragments of full-blown lotuses shaken by many monstrous tails of bhākūṭa-fish that had been terrified by the notes, indistinct for passion, of geese and herons; . . . whose banks were strident with the screams of multitudes of wild cocks whose nests thronged the bowers of reeds that had sprung up near its shores' (ed. Hall, pp. 95, 98).

The sama, or 'equal,' is thus defined in the Kāvyādarśa (1. 47; cf. Sāhityadarpaṇa, No. 618; Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, pp. 175-176, Benares, 1898) :

bandhā mṛduṣphuṭonīśravarnavinyāsayonayah,*

'sama is not uneven in collocations (of words); these collocations, smooth, rough, (and) middling, depend on the arrangement of smooth, rough, and mixed (sounds).' It is illustrated by the passage kāmadārūṇā madārūṇānētrāśmaramayaṇi ramayantāṇi tvāṁ adayaṇi madayaṇī param akam itāraṇi param akam itāraṇi vāñchati, 'what gentle-eyed woman who fervently delighteth thee, that art not inflamed with passion, (but art) the essence of love, delightsome, (and) a most excellent lover, desireth another that is no lover [cruel with passion! red-eyed with lust! alas, an unlovely dame desireth thee, the essence of lovelessness, hot, pitiless, absolutely no lover, (and) bound for utmost woe!]’ (ed. Hall, pp. 213–214).

The vidhi, or ‘rule,’ is defined as follows by the Kuvalayānanandakārikā (I. 167):

siddhasyāi “va vidhānam yat tad āhur vidhyalāmkṛtim,

‘what (is) a precept of a thing well established, that they call the vidhi adornment,’ and is exemplified by kuraṅgikē kalpaya kuraṅgaśāvakēbhyah śaspāṇkuram kiśorikē kāraya kiśorakēbhyah pratyavēkṣāṇi, ‘Kurangikā, prepare a blade of young grass for the antelope fauns! Kiśorikā, have the young colts looked after’! (ed. Hall, pp. 230–231).

The sambhāvana, or ‘supposition,’ is thus defined by the Kuvalayānanandakārikā (I. 125):

sambhāvanam yadī ‘ttham syād ity ūhō ‘nyasya siddhayē, ‘sambhāvana is a conjecture for the attainment of something else with the thought, “if it were so.”’ It is illustrated in the Vāsavadattā by the passage tvatkr̥tē yā “nayā vēdanā” nubhūtā sā yadi nabhaḥ patrāyatē sāgarō mēlānandāyatē brahmāyatē lipikarō bhujagarājāyatē kathakas tadā kim api katham apy anekāir yugasahasrāir abhilikhyatē kathyatē vā, ‘the pain that hath been felt by this maiden for thy sake might be written or told in some wise or in some way in many thousands of ages if the sky became paper, the sea an ink-well, the scribe Brāhma, (and) the narrator the Lord of Serpents’ (ed. Hall, pp. 238–239).

The kāraṇamālā, or ‘chain of causes,’ is given the following definition in the Kuvalayānanandakārikā (I. 103; cf. Kāvyaprakāśa, tr. Jhā, p. 246, Benares, 1898):

gumphaḥ kāraṇamālā syād yathāprakrāntakāraṇāḥ,

‘a series (made) by causes proceeding one after the other is a kāraṇamālā’ and an example is seen by Śivarāma in the description of Vāsavadattā’s palace as ajñātataṭasphūṭikapat- ṭasukhāniṣṭaṇānidrāyamāṇāprāsādāpārāvaiābhīḥ, ‘with palace doves sleeping comfortably (because) perched on slabs of crystal from shores unknown' (ed. Hall, pp. 217-218).

The udātta, or 'exalted,' is thus defined in the Sāhityadarpana (No. 752; cf. Kāvya-prakāśa, tr. Jhā, p. 240, Benares, 1898; Kuvalayānandakārikā, 1. 162-163):

*lōkātiśayasampattivarjanō "dāttam ucyatē
yad vā "pi prastutasyā 'ngam mahatām caritām bhavet,*

'the portrayal of extraordinary prosperity is called udātta, or it would even be the deeds of the great, (if they form) part of the subject in hand.' An illustration of this figure is found in another portion of the description just quoted: karṇūrapūra-viracitapulinatatanivīṣṭaninadānumīyamānarājahaṇṣibhir, 'with flamingoes whose noise would imply that they had settled near the sand bank formed by the stream of camphor' (ed. Hall, p. 218), only one of extreme wealth being able to possess such a river.<sup>1</sup>

The kāitavāpahnuti, or 'false concealment,' is defined by the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 28) as follows:

kāitavāpahnutir vyaktāu vyājādyāir nihnutēḥ padaiḥ,

'kāitavāpahnuti (consists) in the manifestation of concealment by words of pretext and the like,' and finds exemplification in the Vāsavadattā in the passage ativēganipītajaladhijalaśaṅkhamālām iva balākācchalād udvamann adrśyata jaladah, 'the cloud seemed to vomit forth, like a crane, what appeared to be a series of ocean shells that had been drunk down too hastily' (ed. Hall, pp. 283-284).

The lōkōkti, 'popular expression,' is thus defined by the Kuvalayānandakārikā (1. 156):

'the imitation of a popular colloquialism is called lōkōkti,' and finds an illustration in Subandhu's romance in the exhortation tad adhunā yadi tvaṁ saha pāṇśukriḍanasa mādūkh khasukhō 'si

tadā mām anugaccha, 'now, therefore, if thou didst share the sorrows and joys of our playing together in the dust, then follow me' (ed. Hall, p. 82).

The svabhāvōkti, or 'natural description,' receives the following definition in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (i. 160; cf. Kāvyaprákāśa, tr. Jhā, p. 235, Benares, 1898) :

svabhāvōktih svabhāvasya jātyādīsthasya varṇanam,

'svabhāvōkti is the description of inherent nature consisting of characteristics and the like.' As an example from the Vāsavadattā may be cited :

paśyō 'dañcadavāñcadañcitavapuh paścārddha pūrvārddhabhāk stabdhōttāmita pṛṣṭhāniśthitamanāgblugnāgralāṅgūlabhṛt dañṣṭrākōṭivisāṅkātāsyakuharā kurvan satām utkātām utkārṇāḥ kurutē kramaṇ kari patām krūrākrtih kēsāri,

'lo, with his bending body bending up and bending down, now with his hind quarters and now with his fore quarters, with the tip of his tail slightly bent along his hard, arched back, with his cavernous mouth monstrous with the tips of his fangs, making his mane huge, (and) with his ears erect, the horrible lion doth make attack upon the lord of elephants' (ed. Hall, p. 103).

The kāvyārthāpatti, or 'poetic inference,' is defined as follows in the Kuvalayānandakārikā (i. 119) :

kāimutyeñā 'rthasamsiddhiḥ kāvyārthāpattir iṣyate,

'an a fortiori attainment of a matter is regarded as kāvyārthāpatti.' It is exemplified by Subandhu in his heroine's letter to Kandarpakētu :

pratyakṣadrṣṭabhbāvā "py asthirahṛdayā hi kāminī bhavati svapnānubhūtabhbāvā draḍhayati na pratyayam yuvatiḥ,

'a loving maid is of unsteady heart even when she hath seen the feelings (of her lover) with her eyes; a girl who hath learned his feelings only from a dream hath no assurance' (ed. Hall, p. 164).

Literary and Ethical Merit of the Vāsavadattā. The Vāsavadattā apparently being written to display its author's skill in rhetoric, rather than his inventive powers in fiction, we are naturally led to consider what literary value we may assign to it. Here the 'personal equation' must inevitably play a part, and here the fundamental difference between Oriental and Occidental concepts must be duly recognised. In the West the subject-matter comes first in nearly every form of literary composition ; and the more tense and nervous the people, the more simple and direct is the style. In the East, on the contrary, the form is often more important than the matter, especially in periods of hyper-civilisation, such as was that during which Subandhu wrote. We must, therefore, consider the Vāsavadattā from the luxuriant atmosphere of the land of its author, not from the 'practical' point of view of the West. To me, at least, there is true melody in the long, rolling compounds, a sesquipedalian majesty which can never be equalled save in Sanskrit ; and the alliterations have a lulling music all their own to ears weary of the blatant discords of vaunted modern 'progress.' There is, on the other hand, a compact brevity in the paronomasias, which are, in most cases, veritable gems of terseness and twofold appropriateness, even though some are manifestly forced and are actually detrimental to the sense of the passages in which they occur. Yet in judging Subandhu for his faults, it must be remembered that he created, at least so far as we now know, a new literary genre in India ; and if this fact be borne in mind, his blemishes appear to be marvellously few. In estimating his literary merits special stress should be laid on his descriptions. These are, it must be confessed, cloying from their abundance. They form the preponderating part of the entire romance, and the slender framework of the story is wellnigh lost beneath them. Yet despite this tropical luxuriance; the descriptions are not without beauty and appropriateness, whether they set forth the charms of mountain, forest, and stream, or portray the rāja's valour and the loveliness of the heroine herself. The entire romance may, in a sense, be likened to India's own architecture, where the whole structure is so overlaid with minute detail that the eye forgets the outlines of the building in amazement at the delicate traceries which cover it.

Nor does it seem to me that the ethical standard of the Vāsavadattā can be objectionable to one of healthy mind. True, the East is not as the West ; and there are personal descriptions more detailed than would be desirable in Occidental literature, together with evident approval of relations and ideals which the less sensual Western mind rightly condemns. There are passages, too, which I would gladly have omitted, had I felt that a faithful translator could do so. And yet, despite all this, I find in the romance no evidence of delight in uncleanness, such as nauseates, for example, in Petronius or in Martial. It is not pornographic ; it is, at worst, unmoral, though its rigid adherence to all conventions, both in letter and, I think, in spirit, renders even unmorality almost too harsh an accusation. From an Indian point of view, unlightened by the radiance of Christianity and the morality which it inculcates, I should not hesitate to term the Vāsavadattā a moral work, especially in view of the conditions of life in mediæval India. Its atmosphere, luxuriant though it be, has never seemed to me to be debasing.

It is by no means impossible that some will dissent from the views here expressed regarding the literary and moral quality of Subandhu's romance. If so, they may turn from the first Western translator of the Vāsavadattā to the first Western editor of the romance, Fitzedward Hall, who, in his Introduction, has unsparingly condemned the entire production both in its literary and in its ethical aspects—a precedent followed by Krishnamachariar in his sarcastic critique of the whole plot of Subandhu's work (Introd., pp. 50–66).

Outline of the Plot of the Romance. The outline of the story of the Vāsavadattā is as follows : A king named Cintāmaṇi had a son Kandarpakētu, who was, like his father, the embodiment of all virtues. Once upon a time toward dawn, when true dreams come, the young prince saw in his sleep a vision of a maiden of some eighteen years, whose loveliness could not be surpassed. Jealous sleep forsook Kandarpakētu, who, with his friend Makaranda, left the city in his love-longing for the unknown princess. In their wanderings the pair came to the Vindhya mountains, and there, in the watches of the night, the sleepless prince overheard the conversation of two birds perched on a branch of the tree beneath which he lay. To the story of the husband-bird, trying to explain his late hours to his suspicious wife, Kandarpakētu listened, and was richly rewarded by what he heard. In the city of Pāṭaliputra on the Ganges, so the maina recounted, reigned the mighty monarch Śringārāśekhara, who had an only daughter named Vāsavadattā. In the spring she, too, had met her fate in a dream—a youth of matchless beauty, whose name was Kandarpakētu. The confidante of the princess at this juncture was her maid, Tamālikā, who had volunteered to seek Kandarpakētu and bear to him a missive from the princess telling of her love. The lovers were now soon united at Pāṭaliputra, where Kandarpakētu was informed that Śringārāśekhara, dismayed at his daughter's unwedded state, had determined to marry her the very next day to the Vidyādhara prince Puspakētu. Kandarpakētu and Vāsavadattā accordingly returned almost immediately, by means of a magic steed, to the Vindhya; but when the prince awoke in the morning, his beloved was no longer in the bower. Mad with sorrow, he was restrained from suicide only by a voice from heaven which promised him reunion with the princess. After many months of weary searching and waiting, he found Vāsavadattā turned to stone. His touch gave the statue life again, and she told him how, while two armies destroyed each other to gain her for their leaders, she had unwittingly intruded in the garden of a hermit, who laid upon her the curse of petrification until her lover should come. Thus, at last, the woes of the lovers were over, and returning to Kandarpakētu's capital, delight was theirs ever afterward (for other summaries see Hall, Introd., pp. 29-43; Stréhly, Revue politique et littéraire, 44. 305-308; Krishnamachariar, Introd., pp. 9-14; and the references given in the bibliography, below, pp. 197-199).

From this brief outline of the plot of the Vāsavadattā it will be seen that Subandhu alludes to several incidents widely found in literature and folk-tales, such as talking birds, magic steeds, and transformation. To all these I have sought to give parallels, especially from modern Indian folk-tales, in footnotes to the passages in which they occur. There seems to be no parallel, however, to the story of the Vāsavadattā as a whole, and, as already stated (p. 2), Subandhu evidently invented the slender plot of his own romance (cf. also Hall, Introd., pp. 1-6).

Sanskrit 'Estilo Culto' Previous to Subandhu, and in Later Epigraphy. This allusion to comparative literature brings us to possible quasi-parallels to the style of the Vāsavadattā. The commingling of prose and verse which is characteristic of the ākhyāyikā, kathā, and other forms of gadya, or poetical prose (cf. Regnau, Rhétorique sanskrit, pp. 74-77, Paris, 1884), was by no means an innovation of Subandhu. It is found, for instance, in the Pañcatantra and the Jātakas, as well as in the gāthās of the Brahmanas and the Northern Buddhists, even though these latter be more archaic than the prose in which they are set.

Obscure as is the date of the beginning of the kāvya style in India, a flood of light has been cast on its early history by Bühler in his 'Die indischen Inschriften und das Alter der indischen Künstpoesie,' in SWAW. 122, Abhandlung 11. There he has shown that the eulogy of Vatsabhaṭṭi, preserved in an inscription in the Temple of the Sun at Maṇdasōr, and dated 473-474 A.D., contains descriptions of cities, natural phenomena, and the like, together with compound words of inordinate length, and the rhetorical devices of anuprāsa, upamā, utprēkṣā, rūpaka, and (possibly) virōdha, all of which even fulfil the requirements laid down, for instance, by Daṇḍin in his Kāvyaḍarśa. The term kāvya itself occurs at least as early as 375-390 A.D. in Hariṣeṇa's panegyric on Samudragupta, inscribed on a pillar at Allāhābād, which also contains long compounds and the rhetorical figures of varṇānuprāsa, rūpaka, upamā, and śleṣa. The kāvya style is carried back to the early second half of the second century A.D. by the Girnār inscription of Rudradāman, which has long compounds and numerous anuprāsas, together with two upamās and one utprēkṣā. It is thus clear that a fairly developed kāvya was known in India as early as the second century of our era, not forgetting that the epic of the Rāmāyaṇa contains many approximations to the kāvya style (Jacobi, Das Rāmāyaṇa, pp. 119-126, Bonn, 1893).

In the course of time kāvya inscriptions became more elaborate, particularly in their use of the śleṣa. Mention can here be made only of the śleṣas and virōdhas in the Valabhī grant of Dhruva-sēna III, dated in 653-654 A.D. (Hultzsch, EI. 1. 85-92); the Balōda plates of Tivaradēva, of the middle of the eighth century (Hultzsch, ib. 7. 102-107); a grant of Indrarāja III, dated in 915 A.D. (Bhandarkar, ib. 9. 24-41); the Cambay plates of Gōvinda IV, dated in 929-930 A.D. (Bhandarkar, ib. 7. 26-47); and the Dēvulapalli plates of Immaḍi Nr̥siṁha, dated in 1504 (Ramayya, ib. 7. 74-85); though allusion should also be made to the general style of such an inscription as the Kaḍaba plates of Gōvinda III, dated in 812-813 A.D. (Lüders, EI. 4. 332-349). In the inscriptions of the Vāillabhaṭṭasvāmin temple at Gwaliar, dated in 874-875 A.D. (Hultzsch, EI. 1. 154-162), which abound in virōdhas, Kielhorn (apud Hultzsch, EI. 1. 157, note 23) has already called attention to a possible reminiscence of the dhanadēnā 'pi pracētasā, 'which is <Kubēra>, yet <Varuṇa>', for it is 'generous' and 'wise', of the Vāsavadattā (ed. Hall, p. 111) in the dhanadō 'pi na pramattō, 'he was <Kubēra>, but not <Varuṇa>', for he was 'generous' and not 'inattentive' (line 6). Kielhorn, moreover, in his edition and translation of the Rādhanpur plates of Gōvinda III, dated in 807-808 A.D. (EI. 6. 239-251), expressly declares (p. 240) that 'an examination of the language and general style of most of these verses can leave no doubt that their author or authors are greatly indebted for their expressions and poetical devices to such works as Subandhu's Vāsavadattā and Bāṇa's Kādambarī and Harṣacarita.' There is no need here to repeat the parallels which Kielhorn has drawn between the inscription in question and the romances of Subandhu and Bāṇa (EI. 6. 247-250), nor is it necessary to make more than a passing allusion to the fact that a close examination of Indian epigraphy would probably reveal many more parallels to the Vāsavadattā and other productions of the same genre. It would by no means follow, however, that such resemblances necessarily imply borrowing from the romances of Subandhu and Bāṇa, for the same research would, in all probability, show an equal, or even greater, affinity with kāvya literature in general. The kāvya of the inscriptions must, therefore, be regarded as an integral part of the vast mass of artificial Sanskrit literature, its development being attained by a process of natural growth.

The Commingling of Prose and Verse and Paronomasia Outside the Vāsavadattā. Outside of India the commingling of prose and poetry in the same composition is found in the Chinese romance P'ing Shan Léng Yen (tr. Julien, P'ing-Chan-Ling-Yen, Les Deux Jeunes Filles lettrées, 2 vols., Paris, 1860); in Sa'di's Gulistān; in The Thousand Nights and One Night; in the Old Picard Aucassin et Nicolette; in Norse Sagas and in Middle Irish tales and histories (cf. Windisch, Irische Texte, 3. 447-449, Leipzig, 1891-1897); and in Boccaccio's L'Ameto; as well as in the Saturæ Menippeæ of Varro; Petronius, the author of the Historia Apollonii regis Tyri; and among Basutos and Eskimos (cf. MacCulloch, Childhood of Fiction, London, 1905, pp. 480-481; Teuffel-Schwabe, Geschichte der romischen Literatur, 5 ed., pp. 43-44, Leipzig, 1890). In like manner, the elaborate paronomasias which are so essentially a part of the style of the Vāsavadattā, and which later led to such productions as Kavirāja's Rāghavapāṇḍavīya, which in identical words celebrates the deeds of the Raghu princes by one reading and those of the Pāṇḍava heroes by the other reading, or Rāmacandra's Rasikarañjana (ed. and tr. Schmidt, Stuttgart, 1896), which may be read as a laudation either of asceticism or of eroticism, were in vogue, as we have seen, long before the time of Subandhu.<sup>1</sup> They also occur in the Chinese romance Ch'in P'ing Mei (cf. Giles, History of Chinese Literature, p. 309, London, 1901) and in the writings of Llyly.

<sup>1</sup> To this list Krishnamachariar (Introd., p. 18) adds Dhananjaya's Dvisandhāna-kāvya (ed. Bombay, 1895 = Kāryamālā, No. 49) and the Rāghavayādavapāṇḍavīya, or Kāthātrayīvyākhyāna, of Cidambara and his son Anantanārāyaṇa, which gives the substance of the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, and Bhāgavatapurāṇa. Another literary curiosity of this general type is the elegy of Leon of Modena on his teacher, Moses Bassola, which may be read either in Hebrew or in Italian (cf. Jewish Encyclopedia, 2. 576, New York, 1902).

Subandhu and Llyl. It is Llyl, indeed, with whom Subandhu may perhaps best be compared for a general parallel with the style and spirit of the Vāsavadattā. Neither the Euphues nor Subandhu's romance is concerned so much with the matter as with the form, although the English author manifests a didactic purpose which finds no counterpart in the Sanskrit writer. Like the Vāsavadattā, the Euphues and its continuation contain episodes, or stories within stories, as the tale of Callimachus (Llyl, ed. Arbor, pp. 227-245, Birmingham, 1868), which itself contains the story of Cassander the hermit (pp. 235-239), thus parallelling the arrangement not only of the Vāsavadattā and the Kādambarī, but also of the Pañcatantra, Śukasaptati, Vitālapañcavimśati, The Thousand Nights and One Night, Decameron, and other similar works.<sup>1</sup> Llyl's romance is curiously like Subandhu's in yet other respects. Here I may note particularly from his Euphues the use of paronomasia, alliteration, antithesis (corresponding respectively to Subandhu's employment of śleṣa, anuprāsa, and virōdhā), and learned allusions. From the mass of possible citations under each category I quote but two of each. (1) Paronomasia: 'and though they be commonly in a great cholar that receiue the mate, yet would I willingly take euery minute tenne mates to enjoy Liuia for my louing mate' (Llyl, ed. Arbor, p. 66, Birmingham, 1868); 'did not Iupiters egge bring forth as well Helen a light huswife in earth, as Castor a light Starre in heauen?' (p. 208).<sup>2</sup> (2) Alliteration: 'these subtil shiftes, these painted practises (if I wer to be wonne) would soone weane me from the teate of Vesta to the toyes of Venus' (p. 76); I am Philautus no Italian lady, who commonly are woed with leasinges, and won with lust, entangled with deceipt, and enjoyed with delight, caught with sinne, and cast off with shame' (p. 360). (3) Antithesis: 'how curious were we to please our Lady, how carelesse to displease our Lorde? Howe devout in seruing our Goddesse, how desperate in forgetting our God'? (p. 106); 'thou weapest for the death of thy daughter, and I laugh at the folly of the father, for greater vanitie is there in the minde of the mourner, then bittersesse in the death of the deceased. But shee was amiable, but yet sinful, but she was young and might haue liued, but she was mortall and must haue dyed. I but hir youth made thee often merry, I but thine age shold once make thee wise. I but hir greene yeares wer unfit for death, I but thy hoary haires should dispypse life' (pp. 182-183). (4) Learned allusions: 'the filthy Sow when she is sick, eateth the Sea-Crab, and is immediatly recured: the Torteyse hauing tasted the Viper, sucketh Origanum and is quickly reuiued: the Beare ready to pine licketh vp the Ants, and is recouered: the Dog hauing surfetted to procure his vomitte, eateth grasse and findeth remedy: the Hart beeing perced with the dart, runneth out of hand to the hearb Dictanum, and is healed. . . . Ah well I perceiue that Loue is not unlyke the Figge tree, whose fruite is sweete, whose roote is more bitter then the clawe of a Bitter: or lyke the Apple in Persia, whose blossome sauoreth lyke Honny, whose budde is more sower then Gall' (p. 61); 'Loue knoweth no laws: Did not Iupiter transforme himselfe into the shape of Amphitrio to embrace Alcmæna? Into the forme of a Swan to enjoy Læda: Into a Bull to beguile Iò: Into a showre of golde to winne Danae: Did not Neptunc chaunge himselfe into a Heyfer, a Ramme, a Floud, a Dolphin, onely for the loue of those he lusted after? Did not Apollo conuert himselfe into a Shephearde, into a Birde, into a Lyon: for the desire he had to heale his disease'? (p. 93).

<sup>2</sup> It is well known that paronomasia occurs not infrequently in Shakespeare (e.g. Julius Caesar, 1. 2. 155; Merchant of Venice, 4. 1. 123; Taming of the Shrew, 2. 1. 190; Richard II, 2. 1. 74); and it seems to have been a favourite device of Ben Jonson (e.g. Mermaid ed., 1. 15-16, 20, 68, 106, 344; 2. 91; 3. 178, 402, London, n.d.).

Parallels such as these might be multiplied indefinitely, not only between the Vāsavadattā and the Euphues, but between Subandhu's romance and many other productions both of the East and of the West.<sup>1</sup> Here, however, it must suffice to note that Dunlop, in his History of Prose Fiction (ed. Wilson, London, 1896), records the following incidents and motifs which may now be compared with those in the Vāsavadattā: story within story (1. 30, 37; 2. 389, 405, 409, 416, 436, 438); love from a dream (1. 253, 258-259, 380); magic steeds (1. 339, 342, 375); love letters (2. 382-383; cf. Schlegel, 'Feuilles d'arbre comme lettres d'amour,' in Mélanges Charles de Harlez, pp. 271-274, Leiden, 1896); and birds playing a part in affaires de cœur (2. 482). It should also be observed that Dunlop repeatedly alludes to Indian parallels with Occidental literature (1. 12, 64-65, 74, 76, 109-110, 210, 306, 318, 413, 459-461; 2. 8, 30, 49, 53-54, 81, 87-88, 90, 118-120, 127-128, 272, 509, 558-559), although the most of these refer to the novel, or 'short story,' and not to the romance.

The Sanskrit Romance Compared with the Greek. The sole national romance literature of the West which has been regarded as connected with that of India is the Greek. The view has been advanced by Peterson (Kādambarī, 2 ed., Introd., pp. 101-104, Bombay, 1889, where several parallels are adduced between the Kādambarī and Achilles Tatios), Weber (Sitzungsberichte der Berliner Akademie, phil.-hist. Klasse, 37. 917), and Goblet d'Alviella (Ce que l'Inde doit à la Grèce, p. 136, Paris, 1897) that the Indian romance was a direct importation from Greece. This hypothesis, however, is rejected by Lévi (Quid de Graecis veterum Indorum monumenta tradiderint, p. 60, Paris, 1890) with what seems to me to be perfect justice. It is, of course, true that many parallels of incident and even of literary device exist between the Sanskrit and the Greek romance. Among parallels of incident I may note the following, restricting the list to similarities between the Greek romances and the Vāsavadattā: falling in love from a dream (story of Zariadres and Odatis as recorded by Athenaios, Deipnosophistai, 13. 35; this story is clearly of Eastern origin; cf. Rohde, Griechischer Roman, 2 ed., pp. 47-54, Leipzig, 1900, where the parallel with the Vāsavadattā is expressly noted; for dreams in general in the Greek romances see Rohde, op. cit. pp. 508, 524, 531-533, 547, 561, 566); svayamvara, or 'self-choice' of a husband (also in the story of Zariadres and Odatis; cf. Rohde, op. cit. p. 52); letters between lovers (Achilles Tatios, Τὰ κατὰ Λευκίππην καὶ Κλειτοφῶντα, 5. 18, 20; Niketas Eugenianos, Tà κατὰ Δρόσιλλαν καὶ Χαρικλέα, 2. 169–179, 202–223, 240–277, 284–314; 5. 199–247; Eustathios, Tò καθ' Ὑσμίνην καὶ Ὑσμιάν δῆμα, 9. 8; 10. 2; cf. Rohde, op. cit. pp. 513, 566); fainting (Chariton, Tà περὶ Χαιρέαν καὶ Καλλιρρόην, 1. 4; 2. 7; 3. 6; 4. 5; 8. 1; cf. Rohde, op. cit. p. 172, where the parallel with the Vāsavadattā is noted); long-winded lamentations (Niketas Eugenianos, 1. 226–257, 289–352; 2. 8–23; 4. 110–150; 5. 131–168, 183–193; 6. 34–94, 204–234, 306–327; 8. 84–130, 196–238; 9. 37–107; cf. Rohde, op. cit. p. 566); and threatened suicide (Chariton, 1. 5, 5. 10; 6. 2; 7. 1; 8. 8; cf. Rohde, op. cit. p. 527). The following parallels of literary device, similarly restricted, may also be noted: stories within stories and episodes (the adventures of Derkullis and the sub-episode of Astraios in the lost Tà ὑπὲρ Θύλην ἀπιστα; the story of Aigialeus in Xenophon Ephesaios, Tà κατὰ "Αινθειαν καὶ Ἀβροκόμην Ἐφεσιακά, 5. 1; and the stories of Knemon in Heliodoros's Αἰθιοπικά, 1. 9–14; 2. 8–10; and of Kalasiris, ib. 2. 24–5. 1; 5. 17–33; with the sub-episode of Charikles, ib. 2. 29–33); descriptions of nature (Niketas Eugenianos, 1. 77–115; Achilles Tatios, 1. 15; Longos, Ποιμενικὰ τὰ κατὰ Δάφνιν καὶ Χλόην, 4. 2–3); detailed personal descriptions (Achilles Tatios, 1. 1; Niketas Eugenianos, 1. 120–158; cf. Rohde, op. cit. pp. 160–166); learned allusions and citations of precedents (Longos, 1. 16; 4. 17; Achilles Tatios, 1. 8; 2. 36–37); and alliteration, parisoi, homoioteleuta, and similar figures of rhetoric which correspond in a sense to the Sanskrit anuprāsa (Achilles Tatios, 1. 1–2; 2. 7; 3. 2, 7; 4. 4; 5. 1, 21; Longos, preface; 1. 18, 30; 2. 35; 3. 3, 24, 33, 34; 4. 18; Eustathios, 1. 4; 2. 13; 4. 1, 3, 12, 21; 5. 11; 7. 13; cf. Rohde, op. cit. pp. 552–553, 561), although they often form rhymes (Achilles Tatios, 1. 1, 11; Longos, preface; 2. 26; 3. 13, 23; 4. 17, 28; Eustathios, 1. 9) and strained compounds (Niketas Eugenianos, 1. 133; 2. 143; 3. 121; 5. 341; 7. 48; cf. Rohde, op. cit. p. 567).

Yet all these parallels, and many more which might be cited, seem to me to prove nothing. In the first place, a large number of them can be considered parallels only by straining the sense of the term; and in the second place, they are obviously the out-working of independent, though partially similar, processes in the development of Greek and Sanskrit literature respectively, and should be interpreted accordingly. But even were an essential resemblance granted, it would still be difficult, I think, to prove the dependence of the Sanskrit romance on the Greek, the latter being, of course, the earlier. The romances of the two peoples are totally different both in plan and in spirit, as even a cursory reading will show. The least part of the Sanskrit romance is the thread of the story or the adventures of its characters; all the stress is laid on rhetorical embellishment, minute description of nature, detailed characterisation of exploits and of mental, moral, and physical qualities. In the Greek romance, on the other hand, as in Latin (if we may judge from the Satiræ of Petronius), the story is everything. The reader is hurried from adventure to adventure, the wilder and more improbable the better; fine writing is practically disregarded; description and appreciation of nature are, to all intents and purposes, non-existent. The only Greek romance, it seems to me, that can, by the utmost stretch of imagination, be compared even superficially with the works of Subandhu and Bāṇa is the Ποιμενικά of Longos; but even there the sole real similarity is a longing for nature rather than for feverish adventure, a longing which may be traced back to Theokritos, Bion, and Moschos on the one hand, and to Bhartṛhari and his congeners on the other. Even the Daśakumārācarita, which, as a picaresque romance, one might be tempted to compare with the works of Achilles Tatios, Heliodorus, and Chariton, has a totally different plan from any Greek romance, tracing its 'box arrangement' of stories to the peculiarly Indian scheme which may be seen, for instance, in the Pañcatantra, the Kathāsaritsāgara, or the Jātakas, and which was later carried to Persia, where it was incorporated in The Thousand Nights and One Night, ultimately appearing in the Occident in the Decameron of Boccaccio.<sup>1</sup> The adventures narrated in Daṇḍin's romance of roguey, moreover, bear no resemblance, either in plot or in episode, to the amorphisms of Eustathios and his fellows. To sum up, the spirit of the Sanskrit and of the Greek romancers is as divergent as the audiences of scholars on the one hand, and of weaklings on the other, for whom they wrote ; nor can any real affinity, much less any direct connexion, be traced between the romances of India and of Greece.

The Double Recension of the Vāsavadattā. Like the Mahābhārata and the Rāmāyaṇa, the Vāsavadattā appears to be preserved in two distinct recensions, which I would tentatively call 'northern' and 'southern.' The first of these is represented by the text of Hall (Calcutta, 1859) and the second by the Madras edition of 1862, reprinted as an appendix to the present volume, as well as by Krishnamachariar's text (Srirangam, 1906–1908). The 'southern' text, to which Hall's manuscript D seems also to belong, differs from the 'northern' chiefly in showing a large number of interpolations, particularly śliṣas, virodhas, and other forms of similes appended to the series given by the 'northern' text. The spirit, however, of the 'southern' recension is identical with that of the 'northern.' There is, indeed, one omission of a complimentary allusion to the Buddhists (ed. Hall, p. 235) and of one derogatory reference to the Jains (ed. Hall, p. 297 ; cf. above, p. 7), but the retention of all other depreciatory mentions of both sects shows that the 'southern' redactor was not led to modify his text by any circumstances surrounding him ; nor is there any added allusion in the 'southern' text which seems to be specifically South Indian. It may be regarded as practically certain that the 'northern' text represents Subandhu's original composition more closely than does the 'southern' recension, not only in view of the fact that the author of the romance was, in all probability, a native of northern India, where he almost indubitably wrote (cf. above, pp. 12–13), but also in consideration of the familiar principles of textual criticism that the shorter text is, other things being equal, to be preferred to the longer, and that the more difficult reading is to be preferred to the easier, since the 'southern' recension evidently seeks, by substitution or omission, to avoid many difficulties of word, phrase, or allusion which the 'northern' text boldly retains.

Manuscripts and Editions of the Romance. For the manuscripts of the Vāsavadattā and its commentators reference may be made to the catalogues of Sanskrit manuscripts enumerated by Aufrecht (Catalogus Catalogorum, 1. 566, 726; 2. 133-134, 224, 3. 120, Leipzig, 1891-1903). The principal commentators on the Vāsavadattā have been discussed by Hall (Introd., pp. 44-48), and I myself have written on 'Śivarāma's Commentary on the Vāsavadattā' (in FAOS. 24. 57-63), so that the problems there treated need not be repeated in this place.

Although the editions of Subandhu's romance will be duly listed in the bibliography (see below, pp. 197-198), a more detailed discussion seems appropriate here. These editions are seven in number. The first and best-known, which represents the 'northern' recension, is that of Fitzedward Hall (Calcutta, 1859), based on eight manuscripts and accompanied by the gloss of Śivarāma Tripāṭhin, who flourished early in the eighteenth century. The introduction to this edition has become a classic among Sanskritists, and the learning which it evinces on every page renders it amply deserving of this honour. Hall's text, however, represents a form really older than any of his manuscripts, being that of Śivarāma, in whose favour the editor repeatedly discarded the united authority of all his manuscripts, a method of textual criticism which may perhaps be considered open to objection. The text of Hall has been reprinted verbatim by Jivānanda Vidyāsāgara (Calcutta, 1874; 3d ed., 1907). The remaining five editions belong to the 'southern' recension. Of these the earliest is one in Telugu script (Madras, 1861), which was reprinted, with a correction of misprints, in Telugu (Madras, 1862) and Grantha script (Madras, 1870). The second of these, duly collated with the India Office copies of the other two, which Mr. F. W. Thomas, librarian of the India Office, London, most kindly placed at my disposal, is transcribed below (pp. 145-195). The text of this 'southern' recension is evidently later than the 'northern', since it abounds in interpolations, especially in the lengthened ślēṣas and virōdhas. The three editions under consideration contain the same commentary, which has appeared to me to be negligible, and which, according to Mr. J. K. Balasubrahmanyam, the publisher of the Srirangam text (Pref. p. 1) to be mentioned below, 'is traditionally attributed to one Tippa Bhupala, but nothing is certain about it. For instance, just as we were completing this book we got a palm-leaf manuscript of this work containing a commentary said to be by one Ramanatha. On closer examination it turned out to be neither more nor less than the commentary given in the Grantha and Telugu editions.' The same general recension, though with a number of interesting variations, is represented by the edition published at Srirangam in 1906-1908, on the basis of several old palm-leaf manuscripts. It also contains an admirably full, careful, and suggestive modern Sanskrit commentary and an equally noteworthy Sanskrit introduction by the editor, R. V. Krishnamachariar, of which I have most helpfully availed myself. I distinctly consider Hall's and this as the best editions of the Vāsavadattā that have yet appeared. The Telugu text is also represented, more closely, by T. V. Srinivasachariar's edition (Trichinopoly, 1906), which, I regret to say, seems to me to offer scope for some improvement. All the divergencies of the Madras, Srirangam, and Trichinopoly editions from the text of Hall will be found duly recorded in the footnotes to the present translation, while the variations of the 'southern' from the 'northern' recension will be indicated by parentheses in the appended transliteration, the portions of the 'northern' text omitted by the 'southern' being there supplied in square brackets. It will be clear that a critical text of the Vāsavadattā, which shall take into account all accessible manuscripts, commentaries, and editions, is still a desideratum.

The Remaining Sanskrit Prose Romances. Except for a digression on the relation sometimes held to exist between the Sanskrit and the Greek romance (see above, pp. 35-38), this Introduction to the Vāsavadattā has thus far purposely been restricted to Subandhu and his work, especially as Meyer (Dandin's Daçakumāracaritam, die Abenteuer der zehn Prinzen, pp. 1-139, Leipzig, 1902) and Collins (The Geographical Data of the Raghuvanśa and the Daśakumāracarita considered more especially in their Bearing upon the Date of these Works, Leipzig, 1907) have devoted admirable studies to Daṇḍin, while Peterson (Kādambarī, 2 ed., Introd., Bombay, 1889) has done a similar service for Bāṇa. Moreover, the Daśakumāracarita, Harsacarita, and Kādambarī are all readily accessible, not only in numerous editions, which need not be enumerated here, but also in excellent translations (the Daśakumāracarita by Meyer, op. cit., and by Haberlandt, Munich, 1903; the Harsacarita by Cowell and Thomas, London, 1897; and the Kādambarī by Riddings, London, 1896). It may not be amiss, however, to add a brief outline of such other Sanskrit romances as have thus far been analysed, though it must be borne in mind that further investigations and additional and fuller catalogues of Sanskrit manuscripts will, in all probability, add to the sum of ākhyāna literature.<sup>1</sup> Omitting campūs on Rāma, Kṛṣṇa, Aniruddha, and Nala, as well as rifacimenti of the Mahābhārata and Rāmāyaṇa, and pseudo-histories of Śālivāhana and Mayūravarman, attention may here be called to two late Sanskrit romances. The first of these is the Yaśastilaka of Sōmadēva, who completed his romance in 959 A.D. The work has been analysed in detail by Peterson (Second Report of Operations in Search of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Bombay Circle, pp. 33-49, Bombay, 1884) and has been edited by Śivadatta and Parab (Kāvyamālā, No. 70, 2 parts, Bombay, 1901-1903). It is a religious romance, treating of the conversion of Māridatta, king of Rājapura, from Brāhmaṇism to Jainism through the agency of his twin nephew and niece, whom he was about to offer in sacrifice, not knowing who they were, and through the arguments of the Jain sage Sudatta. The familiar device of the story within a story, whereby Māridatta's nephew tells his uncle all his history, and a series of reincarnations, as in the Daśakumārācarita and Kādambarī,<sup>1</sup> are both found in Sōmadēva's romance, while learned precedents and, what is still more remarkable, explicit quotations from other poets, including Bāṇa, abound. Altogether, it is clear from Peterson's admirable analysis that the Yaśastilaka richly deserves translation, both as belonging to a category of Sanskrit literature of which too few specimens are extant, and as a valuable source for additional knowledge of the tenets of the Jains.

<sup>1</sup> Krishnamachariar (Introd., pp. 1-2) notes the paucity of works of this type, but he enumerates the following which would otherwise have escaped my notice. Dhānapāla's Tilakamālā (ed. Bombay, 1903 = Kāvyamālā, No. 85), the Jain romance Gadyacintāmani (variously ascribed to Vādībhasimha, Pradipasimha, and Simhasūri), Abhinavabhattabāṇa's Viranārāyaṇa and Haricandra's Jīvandharacampū, the fragmentary Śrīkrṣṇacarita of Agastyakavi, the lost Trāilokyasundari of Rudra, and the lost Tarangavatī. He also attempts to account for this scantiness (pp. 2-8).

The second romance which should be noted in this connexion is Bāṇeśvara Vidyālamkāra Bhāttācārya's Citracampū, written in 1744 A.D. in honour of Citrasēna, king of Vardhamāna, and briefly analysed by Eggeling (Catalogue of the Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Library of the India Office, 7. 1543-1545, London, 1904). This novel is characterised especially by a long dream, and by an unmistakable inculcation of Vaiṣṇavite Vēdāntism; otherwise it offers but little of interest.

<sup>1</sup> See 'Reincarnation as a Novelistic Device', in WZKM. 18 54-58. For reincarnation in a modern Western novel see Margaret Potter's Flame-Gatherers (London, 1904), and Bain's Descent of the Sun (London, 1903). The earliest example known is the Egyptian Tale of the Two Brothers, written in the nineteenth dynasty (1375-1202 B.C.; tr. Maspero, Contes populaires de l'Égypte ancienne, 3 ed., pp. 3-20, Paris, 1906).

[Dr. Ogden draws my attention to a reference to Subandhu in an anthology of a certain Lakṣmana, described by Peterson (Third Report of Operations in Search of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Bombay Circle, p. 35, Bombay, 1887) under the title of Sūktāvali. The stanza, whose date is thus far unknown, is as follows (Peterson, op. cit., Appendix, p. 55):

jīyād gadyasudhādhunyāḥ
subandhuh prabhavācalah yad bhaṅgāślēṣāñ āśādya
bhaṅgah kavibhir āśritah,

'may Subandhu, in strength immovable, prevail over the nectarous stream of prose, for since he gained combination after the breaking (of words into their component parts), the breaking (of words into their component parts) has been employed by poets.]

VĀSAVADATTĀ OF SUBANDHU

[2] Victorious is divine Sarasvatī,
 Who aideth bards of keen and nimble wit
 To see the world, as 'twere a jujube-fruit,
 Lying within the hollow of their hands.

Victorious, too, is Hari, resting now,
 The while he smileth on the shepherd lads
 Whose upraised arms bend<sup>1</sup> 'neath the awful weight Of their vast burden; yet cīy unto him:
 'Ah, weary art thou, let the mountain be;
 We will sustain it, Kṛṣṇa, lord of all'!

[3] May he<sup>2</sup> whose waist is girded keep you safe,
 Yea, he whose serried furrows brightly shine;
 E'en while the zone he hath too tightly drawn Doth work distraction by its beauteousness.<sup>3</sup>

[4] Victorious is the god<sup>4</sup> whose crescent gleams
 Like to a silvēr pearl by Umā set<sup>5</sup>
 Upon his brow, when from his blazing eye
 She gathereth the black collyrium.

How blessed are those souls beneficent
 Who work the weal of others, for to them
 The moon that openeth the lotus-buds
 Doth give a twofold meed of radiance<sup>6</sup>!

[5] The wise say sooth: 'More loathsome than a snake
 Is he whose soul is filled with wickedness':
 The serpent <hateth the ichneumon tribe>,
 But leaves his brethren safe; while knavish folk
 With venomous tongues <destroy their nearest kin>.<sup>7</sup>

[6] In evil only are the wicked wise;
 Like as the owl is blind, save in the dark.<sup>1</sup>

There is but one eclipse—foul calumny;
 Only the clouds that hide the moon are black<sup>2</sup>

[7] And when with sooty and polluting touch
 The man of evil fain would smutch the good,
 He doth increase the radiance of the just,
 E'en as the ashes in the grinder's hand
 Do but enhance the lustrous mirror's sheen.<sup>3</sup>

Yet «drought doth rule» o'er all, the «cranes sport not»,
 Nor doth the «heron seek the azure vault»,
 For lo, the lake hath left this mortal world;
 All «joy is fled», and «strange kings now bear rule»,
 Wasting the earth with «fratricidal» strife,
 For Vīkramāditya hath passed away.<sup>4</sup>

[8] The words of goodly bards rejoice thine ears,
 E'en when thou knowest not their wondrous skill,
 For in a jasmine wreath thine eyes delight,
 Though to thy senses come no perfumes sweet.<sup>5</sup>

The noble gain true knowledge of themselves
 By observation of their fellow men;
 As on the mirror's polished surface falls
 The vision of the soul's own magnitude.<sup>6</sup>

My attention was kindly called to this reference by Professor Zachariae (card of May 2, 1907), and Dr. Grierson very courteously loaned me his personal copy of the little book. And by his staff-like arm on the field of battle [41] the bow was gained, by the bow the arrows, by the arrows his foeman's head, by this<sup>5</sup> the world,<sup>6</sup> by this<sup>7</sup> a leader such as had never been before, by the leader fame, by fame the seven seas, by the seas the renown of the kings of the Kṛta and other ages, and by that<sup>8</sup> constancy, and by this<sup>9</sup> something marvellous every instant. And the periphery of the bosoms of the lovely wives of his foes, who had been consumed by the fire of his majesty, was deserted by their pearl necklaces, as if terrified by the blows of their hands.

Love ; a production of the Creator, so to say, for the enchantment of the triple world.

Then, while he drank her in, as it were, with eyes dilated with joy, sleep, which he had long served, became jealous<sup>1</sup> and deserted him. [68] But when he awoke, he was unable to sustain himself, being drowned, so to speak, in a sea of poison, and as if submerged in the words of his enemies. Thus then, for an instant, he embraced the sky, and with outstretched arms<sup>2</sup> cried to his beloved, as if she were painted in the heavens,<sup>3</sup> graven on his eye, and carven on his heart : 'O, dearest one, come ! come ! where dost thou go ?' [69] Then in that very place he passed the day on his bed, with his eyes closed,<sup>5</sup> with all his attendants barred out, with the doors shut, [69] and refusing all enjoyment of food,<sup>6</sup> betel, and the like. Thus, too,<sup>7</sup> he spent the night as well with longings for the coming of the dream.

Then his confidential friend, named Makaranda, somehow gained entrance<sup>8</sup> and thus addressed Kandarpakētu, who was overwhelmed with the wounds of the arrows of Love : ' My friend, [70] why dost thou take to this unwonted course, which is unbecoming to a man of honour ? When they behold this conduct of thine, the good are swayed by perplexity, while the wicked, on the other hand, make it out to be undesirable and indecorous<sup>9</sup> ; for the heart of the evil man finds its highest delight centred in bringing to light what is undesirable. Who, pray, can discern the true character of such an one ?

[78] 'The shoots of evil vices are born without seed and grow without a stock, and hard they are to uproot ; if a particle of iniquity enters into the heart of the wicked, it is a terrible thing. But into the heart of the good it enters not ; and if at any time it does enter, [79] it is like quicksilver, unstable for an instant ; the virtuous, even as deer, are obedient to the voice of one<sup>1</sup> who knows their pleasure ; persons like thee easily capture the heart of a friend<sup>2</sup> as do the wagtails of the autumn-tide ; and the wise<sup>3</sup> give no unseemly counsel, while the friendship of the foolish is thrown on the side of profit. [80] And likewise,<sup>4</sup> when milk, fancying<sup>5</sup> that "water is as milk because of its sweetness, coolness, purity, and healing of distress," enters into friendship (with water), destruction is wrought by water itself, when it reflects that "ruin has come in times gone by through the decoction of me myself, increased by union with that (milk)."<sup>6</sup> This conduct is, therefore, extiaordinary ; follow the course, my friend,<sup>7</sup> which is customary among the upright ; [81] the noble themselves go utterly astray by mistaking their direction.'<sup>8</sup>

The close union of mingled water and milk becomes, in Sanskrit literature, a type of the truest and most altruistic friendship (cf. Bohtlingk, Indische Sprüche, 2 ed., Nos. 2024, 2026, St. Petersburg, 1870-1873). The passage may, perhaps, be partially elucidated by a stanza from Bhārṭhārī (ib. No. 2026), thus rendered by Tawney (Two Centuries of Bhārṭhārī, pp. 30-31, Calcutta, 1877) :

'Milk to the water with it mixed its native virtues gave,
Which, pitying sore its tortured friend, rushed on a flaming grave,
The milk, unwilling to be left, must share its fellow's fate,— True friendship envy cannot reach, nor fiery pains abate'!

of Love, somehow said slowly: 'Good friend, my mind<sup>1</sup> is confused by a <hundred afflictions> as Diti was confused by <Indra>.<sup>2</sup> This is no time for advice; my limbs seem to be on fire; [82] my faculties are boiling, so to speak; my vitals feel as if bursting<sup>3</sup>; my breath is almost leaving me; my senses are wellnigh eradicated; and my memory is destroyed.<sup>4</sup> Now, therefore, if thou didst share the sorrows and joys of our playing together in the dust,<sup>5</sup> then follow me.' So speaking he went forth from the city with him, unnoticed by his retinue.

Straightway, after going a distance of several hundred nalvas,<sup>6</sup> a great mountain,<sup>7</sup> called Vindhya, was seen with its thousand peaks bowed down to earth,<sup>8</sup> restrained by Agastya's word<sup>9</sup>; [83] with its sides<sup>10</sup> thronged with hundreds of savages eager to slaughter hundreds of female yaks who had been delighted by hearing the songs of pairs of Vidyādhara (then) slumbering peacefully<sup>11</sup> in the bowers within its caves; with its rocky sides cooled by breezes bearing the perfume of trickling yellow sandal-wood<sup>12</sup> broken and dragged down by the trunks of the elephants on its ridges<sup>13</sup>; [84] with the monkeys<sup>14</sup> eager to lick their paws wet with the sap of the palmyra-palm fruit which had been broken by its exceedingly long fall; with its borders fragrant with the

Because of the guise of its ruddle it seemed to have been employed by Aruṇa to trace the path of the chariot of the sun<sup>3</sup>; [90] it watched, as it were, the journey of Agastya with eyes dilated because the sun and moon had come upon its summit; on account of the old sloughs of snakes it seemed to have a mass of entrails hanging out<sup>4</sup>; as Kumbhakarṇa had a host of monkeys come within his «teeth»,<sup>5</sup> it had a host of monkeys come upon its «summit»; [91] it had bowers of screw-pines for the rendezvous of the assembled nymphs of Śaci's Lord who marked their pathway with a series of footprints dyed with red henna.

Though of «no family», it was adorned by a «noble ancestry», for it did «not cling to the ground» and it was «adorned with beautiful bamboos»; though it was «evidently safe», it yielded the «fruit of death», for it had «hara-nut trees» and yielded «plantains»; though «measured», it was «measureless», for it had «plateaus» and was «immeasurable»; [92] though «noisy», it was «silent», for it had a «river» and was «still»; though a «Bhīma», it was a friend of «Kicaka», for it was «terrible» and a friend of «reeds»; though it hid its «garments», it had brilliant «raiment», for it hid the «sky» and had brilliant «sunbeams».

As the Mīmāṃsā and Nyāya philosophies conceal the views of the «Digambara Jains», it concealed the view of the «quarters of heaven and of the sky». It also had its vicinage adorned with pools which were delightful on account of the appearance of the «blue lotus»,<sup>2</sup> as the Harivamśa is delightful on account of the appearance of «Puṣkara»; [94] that were thronged with «pairs of fishes and with crabs» as the Zodiac has «Pisces, Gemini, and Cancer»<sup>3</sup>; and that had hosts of «birds, elephants, galangal, and young medlar-trees» as the parts of the day have the host of «Śakuni, Nāga, Bhadra, and Vālava».<sup>4</sup> It also showed manifold «metrical» charms with «kusumavicitrās, vamśāpatrapatitas, suku-māralalitās, puṣpitāgrās, śikharinīs, praharśinīs, and latās»,<sup>5</sup> since it showed manifold charms «produced» through its «creepers, lovely on account of their flowers, which had fallen on the bamboo leaves, tender in their grace, tipped with blossoms, crested, and charming».

[95] As if by a very dear mistress with outstretched wavy arms, it was embraced, furthermore, by the Rēvā, whose waters were perfumed by the abundance of the drops of liquid which had fallen from the fragments<sup>6</sup> of fullblown lotuses shaken by many monstrous tails of bhākūṭa-fish<sup>7</sup> that had been terrified by the notes, indistinct for passion, of geese and herons; whose waters

Then Makaranda, getting fruits and roots, brought an abundance<sup>2</sup> of pleasing food in some way or other, and himself ate the remainder of what had been enjoyed by Kandarpakētu. Thereupon, placing that most dear one on the tablet of his heart, looking on her as if limned by a pencil,<sup>3</sup> [108] Kandarpakētu, with unshaken resolution, slept on a couch of boughs prepared by Makaranda. Then, when but half a watch of the night<sup>4</sup> had elapsed, Kandarpakētu heard there, on the tip of the rose-apple tree, the chatter of a parrot and a maina<sup>5</sup> quarrelling one with the other, and he said to Makaranda : 'Good friend, let us now listen to the chit-chat of this pair'!

Upon the Arabian jasmine-bud<sup>8</sup> that had come forth from its stem the sweetly<sup>9</sup> humming bee [137] seemed to sound the trumpet-call for Kāma’s march<sup>10</sup> to victory over the threefold world. By its fresh shoots the ushoka, because of its longing to be touched by a maiden’s ankleted foot,<sup>11</sup> red with the dye of new lac, seemed to have assumed that colour.<sup>12</sup> The medlar-tree shone as if, through sprinkling<sup>13</sup> with mouthfuls from amorous girls’ lotus lips completely<sup>14</sup> filled with sweet wine, it had assumed its (the wine’s) colour<sup>15</sup> in its own flowers. The ushoka-cluster, dotted by multitudes of bees that had fallen within it, inflamed the hearts<sup>16</sup> of travellers like the circlet of the half-extinguished pyre of the Mind-Born God. The flower of the iron-wood tree was lovely as the wheel<sup>1</sup> of the God of Flowery Arrows for agitating the hearts of absentees. The trumpet-flower seemed to be the hook of the God of the Flowery Bow to catch the fish which are the hearts of the travellers.<sup>2</sup>

The fortunes of Vāsavadattā after leaving her home show, it should be noted, a blending of the Bluebeard (violated tabu) and Sleeping Beauty cycles of folk-tales.

its abodes of grass huts being hidden in clumps of trees; its general's house being arranged; [291] the (fodder) bags being put down; its tents being begun; the courtesans' quarters being set up; with hundreds of neighs of horses being heard; with hundreds of drum-skins being beaten for the halt; with a place of sweet water being sought; with multitudes of market flags being displayed.

[292] 'As I thought: "Is this the host of my father come to search for me, or perchance (the army) of my lord"? the general of the army ran toward me, being informed of events by a scout.<sup>1</sup> Then in like manner there ran up the Kirāta general, who had gone out to hunt followed by an army.<sup>2</sup> Immediately I thought: "If I inform my lord, then he, being alone, will be killed by these; [293] but if I do not inform him, then shall I be slain by them."

'Even at the instant of my thought there arose<sup>3</sup> a battle of the two armies<sup>4</sup> as of two vultures eager for one quarry. Then—on the battle's threshing-floor, where the rays of the sun were removed<sup>5</sup> by the shower-clouds of arrows from the hostile bows<sup>6</sup>; [294] with Vidyādhara wandering about, embracing their opportunities for brave warriors that had been tossed high by pairs of tusks of elephants skilled in deeds of battle<sup>7</sup>; with countless circles of the bards of the gods gathering to witness the

<sup>1</sup> Tel. ed. and Srirangam text, 'then, as I suddenly saw the camp of an army hidden in a clump of trees and thought: "Is this my father's host come to fetch me or the host of my noble lord"? a Kirāta general, informed of the news from afar by a scout, ran to me.'

conflict<sup>1</sup>; with a welcome appearance caused by headless corpses of bodies occupied by Vētālas<sup>2</sup>; greedy for the adornment,<sup>3</sup> in a she-fiend's ear, of a mortar filled with the foot of an elephant that had been hacked off by the sword of a soldier<sup>4</sup>; [295] with laudations in the excessive din that arose<sup>5</sup>; (and) with timid jackals<sup>6</sup>—the warriors drew at once the «lives» of their foes and the «strings» of their bows, paying no heed to the bodies as if they were lumps of flesh to be the prey of jackals,<sup>7</sup> or had been bitten by serpents.<sup>8</sup>

‘The<sup>9</sup> mighty elephants were like «generous» donors that bear not<sup>10</sup> meeting with «beggars», for they «shed ichor» and bore not<sup>10</sup> meeting with «arrows»; like fortunate paramours adorned with «passion» and with golden «girdles», for they were adorned with «minium» and had golden «girths»; like goodly gardens «beauteous with plantain-trees» and «filled with birds», for they were «bright with banners» and were «attended by elephants»; like nights<sup>11</sup> adorned with garlands of «constellations», for they had garlands of «pearls»; like days with «blossoming flowers», for they had «lashing trunk-tips».<sup>12</sup> [296] And<sup>13</sup> the horses seemed like creatures bereft of sense<sup>14</sup> «abandoning patience», for they

<sup>1</sup> Tel. ed., ‘with the circle at its doorway formed by the many feet of the bards of the gods that had come to witness the conflict.’

<sup>2</sup> Tel. ed. and Srirangam text omit this clause. The Vētālas are a class of malevolent ghosts who animate corpses and haunt cemeteries. They often enter the body of a living man while his spirit is absent, or may even be spirits of the living which prefer to make their dwelling in corpses (cf. Crooke, Popular Religion and Folk-Lore of Northern India, 2 ed., I. 243–244, Westminster, 1896).

‘Then spread the dust<sup>5</sup> born of battle, hiding the eye as if smiling; concealing the existence of the ear as if afraid of hearing calumny of another; [297] frenzied, as it were, being tossed by the motion of the wind; a cause of grayness, so to speak, to the Apsarasas; a cause of blindness, it might be termed, to the soldiers; the darkness, in all seeming, of the evening of conflict; fallen and cut off from its «family», as it were, since it was cut off from the «earth»; resembling the doctrines of the adherents of the Mimāṁsā that conceal the «doctrines of the Jains», since it concealed the «sight of the quarters (of heaven) and the sky»; like unto a good man clinging to «Viṣṇu's feet», since it clung to the «zenith».<sup>6</sup> One assumed an «agonising

<sup>2</sup> Tel. ed., ‘like the Lēkhas that have increase with Indra, for they «included indravṛddha steeds»; like drunkards «driving in dramshops», for they were «adorned with defences»; so the Srirangam text, except ‘like the Lēkhas that have increase through the «weapons of Indra», for they had increase through indrāyudha steeds.’

<sup>6</sup> Tel. ed. substitutes for the last two similes ‘«going in the path of the constellations» as an evil prince «goes not in the path of a Kṣatriya»; with the appearance of thick smoke like a quarrel; hiding «living creatures» as the quality of passion hides «truth»; «high-raised» as an ill-bred man is «puffed up»; hiding the path of the

‘Straightway,<sup>10</sup> when the ascetic whose hermitage that was had come with flowers and the like, and had learned of the event, I was cursed by him with the words: “My hermitage hath been broken down because of thee; therefore become stone”<sup>11</sup>! [299] And gradually, perceiving poor me suffering much distress, he<sup>12</sup>

<sup>9</sup> Tel. ed., ‘then, with impotent banners, with tumbling standards, and with the daggers of the soldiers of the armies bent, both entire armies mutually proceeded to slaughter’; similarly the Srirangam text.

<sup>10</sup> Tel. ed. and Srirangam text, ‘and then.’

<sup>11</sup> Tel. ed. and Srirangam text, ‘had learned of the event through his yōga sight, being angered that “this my hermitage hath been broken down because of thee [Vāsavadattā],” I was cursed with the words: “Become a stone image”!’ The folk-tale motif is that of the Bluebeard cycle of punishment in consequence of a violation of tabu (see MacCulloch, Childhood of Fiction, pp. 306–324, London, 1905).

<sup>12</sup> Tel. ed. and Srirangam text, ‘then gradually, out of kindness,—“for this unhappy made the termination of the curse concurrent with the touch of the hand of my noble lord.'

Then Kandarpakētu, together with Makaranda, who<sup>1</sup> had come up, and with Vāsavadattā,<sup>2</sup> [300] went to his own city,<sup>3</sup> and lived<sup>4</sup> enjoying blisses as his heart desired.<sup>5</sup> girl suffers much distress"—and through pity for my noble lord, this hermit, being entreated.'

<sup>5</sup> Tel. ed. and Srirangam text add '(and) that could scarcely be gained in the world of the gods.' Tel. ed. also adds two stanzas, the first being the thirteenth of Hall's introductory stanzas, and the second being the eleventh introductory stanza of the Harṣacarīa; the Srirangam text omits the latter interpolation, but here appends the thirteenth introductory stanza of Hall.

TRANSLATIONS.

Vāsavadattā. Translated into Bangālī by Madun Mohun Tarkālaīkārā. n. p., 1837. [The sole reference to this version which I have been able to find is that by Zenker, Bibliotheca orientalis, 2. 319, Leipzig, 1861. It was inaccessible to Hall, though he knew that it was said to exist (Introd. p. 49).]

Hall (Introd. p. 29) states that his epitome of the Vāsavadattā (ib. pp. 29-43) was 'abridged from a literal version which was first prepared, of the entire story.' The subsequent fortunes of this manuscript translation are unknown to me, and even Mr. Richard Hall, of Wickham Market, Suffolk, the son of Fitzedward Hall, has thus far been unable to trace it (letter of Nov. 27, 1908). The value of this rendering by the first editor of the romance, could it be found, would be too obvious to require further emphasis.

LEXICOGRAPHICAL APPENDIX

The following list of words and meanings occurring in the Vāsavadattā, which the St. Petersburg Sanskrit dictionaries either omit altogether<sup>1</sup> or cite only from native lexicographers, is condensed from my 'Lexicographical Addenda to the St. Petersburg Lexicons from the Vāsavadattā of Subandhu' (ZDMG. 60. 355–368), and is, at the same time, supplemented by the material from the Madras edition of 1862 (which was then unknown to me) and the Srirangam edition of 1906–1908, which appeared subsequently to the study just mentioned.<sup>2</sup> The Hall, Madras, and Srirangam texts are here denoted by the letters H, M, and S respectively, but the latter two are cited only when they present words or meanings not found in the edition of Hall. An asterisk (*) prefixed to a word or meaning denotes that the St. Petersburg dictionaries cite only from Sanskrit lexicographers, and a small circle (°) similarly prefixed implies that the word or meaning in question is entirely omitted by the St. Petersburg lexicons. The numbers within the parentheses refer to pages and lines respectively of the editions employed.

*a (H 113, 1): Viṣṇu.<sup>3</sup>

amṛṣuka (M 67, 6; S 212, 1): °ray, beam of light.

<sup>1</sup> It should be noted in this connexion that a complete index to the Vāsavadattā was prepared by Aufrecht and placed for a time at the disposal of Bohtlingk, who excerpted from it what he deemed most important for his dictionary (Sanskrit-Wörterbuch in kurzerer Fassung, 5. Introd., p. 1, St. Petersburg, 1884).

<sup>2</sup> Similar lists of words and meanings supplementary to those given in the St. Petersburg lexicons have recently been prepared by Meyer for the Kuttanimata and Samayamātrikā (in his Altindische Schelmenbücher, 2. 151–156, Leipzig, 1903), by Schmidt for Appayayadikṣita's Kuvalayānandakārikā in his translation of the work (p. 147, Leipzig, 1907), by Jahn for the Sāurapuṭīāna (Das Saurapurāṇa, pp. 194–195, Strassburg, 1908), by Schmidt and Hertel for Amitagati's Subhāṣitāsandhā (ZDMG. 59. 266–267), by Schmidt for Rāma's Manmathānmathāna (ZDMG. 63. 411), by Oster for the Bhōjaprabandha (in his Die Resensionen des Bhojaprabandha, pp. 15–17, Darmstadt, 1911), by myself for Rājaśēkhara's Viddhaśālabhañjikā (JAOS. 27. 7), and by Hertel for Hemacandra's Parīkṣāparvan (ZDMG. 62. 361–369) and the Pañcatantra (Pañcatantra, ed. Hertel, pp. 291–295, Cambridge, Mass., 1908). By far the most important collection in the present connexion, however, is Thomas's 'Two Lists of Words from Hāpa's Harṣacarita', in J.R.A.S. 1899, pp. 485–517, a list closely analogous to the one here presented from the Vāsavadattā. A similar study of the lexicography of Bāṇa's Kādambavī is still a desideratum.

<sup>3</sup> Professor Otto Franke (card of Oct. 14, 1906) kindly calls my attention to Bhagavadgītā, 10. 33, where Kṛṣṇa (Viṣṇu) says: akṣarāṇām akāśo'mi, 'of letters I am the A.'

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY
INDO-IRANIAN SERIES

Edited by A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON

Professor of Indo-Iranian Languages in Columbia University

Volume 1. A Sanskrit Grammar for Beginners. With Graded Exercises, Notes, and Vocabulary. By A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON. In preparation.

The aim of this work is a practical one; it is designed to furnish a book for the study of the classical Sanskrit in American and English Colleges and Universities.

Volume 2. Indo-Iranian Phonology, with Special Reference to the Middle and New Indo-Iranian Languages. By LOUIS H. GRAY, Ph.D., sometime Fellow in Indo-Iranian Languages in Columbia University. New York, 1902.

Cloth, 8vo, pp. xvii + 264, $1.50 net

A brief statement of the phonetic developments undergone by the principal Indo-Iranian languages from the Sanskrit, Avestan, and Old Persian through the Pali, the Prakrits, and Pahlavi down to the Hindi, Singhalese, New Persian, Afghan, and other Indo-Iranian dialects.

Volume 3. A Bibliography of the Sanskrit Drama, with an Introductory Sketch of the Dramatic Literature of India. By MONTGOMERY SCHUYLER, JR., A.M., sometime Fellow in Indo-Iranian Languages in Columbia University. New York, 1906.

Cloth, 8vo, pp. xi + 105, $1.50 net

The design of this bibliography is to give as complete a list as possible of all printed and manuscript Sanskrit plays and of articles and works relating to the Hindu drama. The introduction furnishes a convenient epitome of the whole subject.

Volume 4. An Index Verborum of the Fragments of the Avesta. By MONTGOMERY SCHUYLER, JR., A.M. New York, 1901. Cloth, 8vo, pp. xiv + 106, $1.50 net

This index collects and cites all examples of each word found in the hitherto discovered fragments not included in Geldner's edition of the Avesta.

Volume 5. Sayings of Buddha: the Iti-vuttaka, a Pali work of the Buddhist canon, for the first time translated, with introduction and notes. By JUSTIN HARTLEY MOORE, A.M., Ph.D. (Columbia), Instructor in French in the College of the City of New York. New York, 1908.

Cloth, 8vo, pp. xx + 140, $1.50 net

This volume presents a Buddhistic work not hitherto accessible in translation. The introduction treats of the composition and general character of the work, the authenticity of certain of its sections, and the chief features of its style and language.

Volume 6. The Nyaishes, or Zoroastrian Litanies. Avestan text with the Pahlavi, Sanskrit, Persian, and Gujarati versions, edited together and translated with notes. (Khordah Avesta, Part 1.) By MANECKJI NUSSErvANJI DHALLA, A.M., Ph.D. New York, 1908. Cloth, 8vo, pp. xxii + 235, $1.50 net

The Pahlavi text, here edited and translated for the first time, is the result of a collation of seventeen manuscripts and forms an addition to the existing fund of Pahlavi literature. The introduction gives an account of the MS. material and discusses the relation of the various versions, their characteristics, and their value.

Volume 7. 'The Daśarūpa, a treatise on Hindu dramaturgy by Dhanamjaya, now first translated from the Sanskrit, with the text and an introduction and notes. By GEORGE C. O. HAAS, A.M., Ph.D., sometime Fellow in Indo-Iranian Languages in Columbia University. New York, 1912.

Cloth, 8vo, pp. xlvi + 169, $1.50 net

This work, composed at the court of King Muñja of Mālava in the latter half of the tenth century, is one of the three most important treatises on the canons of dramatic composition in India. The translation here presented is prefaced by an introduction dealing chiefly with the style and characteristics of the work and its commentary. The notes include, as a special feature, references to parallel passages in all available dramatic and rhetorical treatises.

Volume 8. Vāsavadattā, a Sanskrit Romance by Subandhu.
 Translated, with an introduction and notes, by LOUIS H. GRAY, Ph.D. New York, 1913. Cloth, 8vo, pp. xiii + 214, $1.50 net

This romance is one of the best examples of the artificial and ornate style in Sanskrit prose. Besides the translation, the volume will also contain the transliterated text of the South Indian recension, which differs to a noteworthy degree from that of Hall, and a bibliography. The relation of the Sanskrit romance to the Occidental, especially the Greek, will be discussed in the introduction, and the notes will include parallels of incident in modern Indian and other folk-tales, as well as points of resemblance with other Sanskrit romances.

VOLUMES IN PREPARATION

In addition to the Sanskrit Grammar for Beginners, the following volumes are also in preparation:

The Sanskrit Poems of Mayūra, edited with a translation and notes and an introduction, together with Bāna's Caṇḍīśataka and Mānatunga's Bhaktāmarastotra, by G. PAYN QUACKENBOS, A.M., Tutor in Latin, College of the City of New York.

This volume presents the works of a Sanskrit poet of the seventh century. Besides the Sūryaśataka it includes also the Mayūrāstaka, printed for the first time from the unique birch-bark MS. in the Tübingen University Library. The introduction gives an account of Mayūra's life and works, and the appendixes will contain the text and translation of the supposedly rival poems by Bāna and Mānatunga.

Priyadarśikā, a Hindu Drama ascribed to King Harsha. Translated from the Sanskrit and Prakrit by G. K. NARIMAN and A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON, with notes and an introduction by the latter.

This romantic drama on the adventures of a lost princess was supposedly written by Harsha, king of Northern India in the seventh century, and is now to be published for the first time in English translation. Besides giving an account of the life and times of the author, the introduction will deal also with the literary, linguistic, and archaeological aspects of the play.

Yashts, or Hymns of Praise, from the Khordah Avesta.
 Avestan text with the Pahlavi, Sanskrit, Persian, and Gujarati versions, edited together and translated, with notes, by MANECKJI NUSSEVANJI DHALLA, A.M., Ph.D.

This volume is a continuation of the edition of the Khordah Avesta begun with the Nyashes in volume 6 of the series and will be uniform with that volume in plan and arrangement.

The following volume, not in the Indo-Iranian Series, is also published by the Columbia University Press :

Zoroaster, the Prophet of Ancient Iran. By A. V. WILLIAMS JACKSON. New York, 1899.

Cloth, 8vo, pp. xxiii + 314, $3.00 net

This work aims to collect in one volume all that is known about the great Iranian prophet. The story of the life and ministry of Zoroaster is told in twelve chapters, and these are followed by appendixes on explanations of Zoroaster's name, the date of the Prophet, Zoroastrian chronology, Zoroaster's native place and the scene of his ministry, and classical and other passages mentioning his name. A map and three illustrations accompany the volume.
